*Volunteers that are providing services for which they would have otherwise have been paid, should value their time based on the salary or fee charged for such services. This hourly rate must be corroborated through independent documentation. Such documentation could include a copy of the volunteer's current payroll information or pay stub, fee schedules, salary studies for the service being offered, etc. The documentation must be more than just a statement by the volunteer in order to meet the audit standards.

**To compute an hourly rate for someone that is paid on an annual salaried basis, take the total salary and benefits and divide by 2080. That amount is the hourly rate to be used in valuing the individual's time.
