Research Activity and Interests

1. Anti Corruption

I am particularly interested in the rise of the international anti-corruption movement since the mid 1990s, and in different ideas about what constitutes ‘corruption’. This interest has grown out of my association with Transparency International and the course I teach with the New South Wales Independent Commission. ICAC. This has been funded by a grant from AusAID, and an ARC project with Professor Barry Hindess and Dr Luis de Sousa. We published ‘Governments NGOs and Anti-Corruption’ with Routledge in 2009 and a second edited ‘Corruption: expanding the Boundaries’, dealing with the history and application of the idea of corruption, is under review with Pluto press.

I have been invited to submit a proposal for a book on the International Anti Corruption Movement for a Routledge series on International Institutions edited by Professors Rorden Wilkinson and Thomas Weiss.

Looking ahead, I have joined environmentalist colleagues in an ARC linkage project corruption aspects of carbon trading and avoided deforestation in PNG and Indonesia.

2. Pacific Islands politics and governance.

I have a long standing interest in comparative politics of the Pacific Islands, originally in relation to land policy (my PhD), decentralisation (a project the University of the South Pacific), constitutional reform and more recently ‘good governance’. My 1995 book Foreign Flowers brought this together through the idea of policy transfer, which took a fresh look at long standing questions about the appropriateness of introduced institutions to the region.

Both anti-corruption and Pacific Island interests are brought together in the second draft of a book on ‘Understanding Corruption in the Pacific Islands’ I am currently revising in the light of comments from the series editor at University of Hawaii Press (Maskako Ikeda). The series is on Issues in Pacific Politics, edited by Prof Brij Lal.

I am also working with College colleagues Chris Ballard and Colin Filer to prepare a CRC bid covering research on Pacific Islands Futures.
