Legals and Process

FTI is listed on the Register of Cultural Organisations as a cultural organisation and is endorsed by the Australian Tax Office as having Item 1 Deductible Gift Recipient status, which allows us to receive donations from individuals and organisations and issue a tax deductible receipt.

Donors cannot be a relative, by birth or marriage, of the intended recipient

Donations will be deposited by FTI into a specially maintained bank account, the “Film & Television Institute (WA) Inc. Donations Account”, and a receipt evidencing the tax deductible donation will be issued to the donor.

Donations received are to be applied by FTI to uses that meet the objectives contained within the constitution by which FTI is governed. Supporting the development and production of film projects meets those objectives.

Donations that are received through this program will be passed on as grants to the projects that form part of the program.

Donations can be made using the form inserted in this brochure, or by clicking on the “Donate Now” button on the relevant pages on FTI’s website at <http://fti.asn.au>.

Donors are able to nominate their preferred project however Australian tax law stipulates that the final decision about who money will be granted to is FTI’s alone. Donors will be kept informed of any application of their donation.

Donations to FTI are unconditional, and donors may not receive any benefit, advantage, right or privilege as a condition of their donation. Recipients may acknowledge donors that have supported their projects.

Donations are unable to be refunded – in the case that a project does not proceed for any reason, the application of donated funds will be at the discretion of FTI. FTI may discuss further preferences with the donor in this case.

This event and program is focused on philanthropy as a means of supporting film in Western Australia. Investment for a financial return is another financing vehicle accessed by film producers. FTI advises that we are not registered financial advisors, and that any references to investment through this program is of a general nature only and in no way constitutes financial advice. Parties interested in investment in film projects should seek independent financial and legal advice.
