Given the strong linkage to state standards - both in terms of school accountability and student stakes - it seems only logical that there should be an equally strong relationship between the content of a student's Individualized Education Program (IEP) and the academic content standards for a student's enrolled grade level.

Training around the new standards has focused on utilizing different methods and styles of teaching to ensure that all students learn college and career ready skills. These changes, along with an emphasis on teachers working in teams to analyze student data and collaboratively design instruction, offer a great opportunity for realizing the promise of UDL and differentiated instruction to improve results for all students.

This session is designed specifically for parents of students with disabilities to explore the connections between what's written on an IEP and what and how academic content is taught and assessed.

This event was supported in whole or in part by the U.S. Department of Education, Office of Special Education Programs, (Award #Q27A090111A, CFDA 84.027A, awarded to the Ohio Department of Education).
