

(1) Nonimmigrant Visa (Actual Size)

To be valid, a visa must be unexpired when the alien applies at the port of entry. However, the remaining period of the visa's validity has no bearing on the period of authorized admission granted by the immigration officer. For example, an alien might be admitted for 6 months (and perhaps even receive one or more extensions of stay) even though his visa may have been valid for only one day beyond the date on which he applied for admission. On the other hand, an alien's admission might be limited to one week, even though at the time of admission, his visa may have been valid for four years. Moreover, he might be refused entry altogether, notwithstanding his possession of a valid unexpired visa.

If the bearer of a nonimmigrant visa has been admitted into the United States for a temporary period, he should also have in his possession evidence of his admission and of the terms of such admission. This evidence will usually consist of a Form I-94. However, some aliens who are here on temporary visits may have a Form I-94 but no visa.

Prepared forms for such address changes and reports may be obtained at any post office. A penalty of fine and imprisonment is provided by law for failure to make the required reports. Address letters and reports to the Alien Registration Division, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C. When reporting, give both your number and name.

This edition of Form I-94 was issued to aliens admitted temporarily before January 1, 1983 and may still be held by some aliens admitted before that date. This edition of the I-94 would, however, not constitute evidence of lawful admission for aliens admitted temporarily on or after January 1, 1983 since a revised Form I-94 went into general use on that date. (Refer to Page 3-18). This shows the date of admission and will be annotated with the date the alien is admitted until and any extensions thereof.
