News for Members

Membership Dues

As a reminder, annual membership dues are now due. Please check the mailing label on the envelope for this newsletter and see if your membership expires in 2000.

If so, please send that label along with your check or credit card information for payment. Let us know if you wish to upgrade membership categories, or if there are any changes to your mailing address.

Biggs Elected Director

The Trustees are pleased to announce that Wesley R. Biggs, Sr., has been elected to a position on the DERA Board of Directors.

Wes lives in North Kansas City, Missouri and is employed with the Metropolitan Community Colleges District of Kansas City as a security officer. He also serves also as Deputy Fire Marshal for the Inter-City Fire Protection District.

In addition, Wes is enrolled at Maple Woods Community College, where he is studying a multidisciplinary public safety curriculum that includes Criminal Justice, Environmental Health-Safety, and Fire Sciences. For many years has been active with the Civil Air Patrol (CAP) and the American Red Cross, serving in a variety of key emergency services positions. He is a former CAP Squadron Commander and Director of Senior Programs for the Missouri Wing Headquarters.

Wes will serve a two-year term on the DERA Board.

Membership Cards

We discontinued issuing membership cards several years ago because a survey indicated that very few of our members cared about receiving cards.

Many members, however, have let us know lately that membership cards are important to them. We are obtaining some very nice cards for 2001 memberships, but in the interim we are enclosing with this newsletter your membership card for the year 2000.

We will be sending 2001 pocket calendars late in November along with a form for you to update personal contact information for the membership directory that will be published in February.

Disaster Report Available

DERA has only a few copies left of the excellent book Orissa Disaster: Agony of the Living, which was published in India by Mr. S. Suri, VU2MY.

This 168-page hardback book chronicles the exceedingly difficult response to India's 1999 supercyclone in Orissa State, and outlines the continuing tragedy in that area.

While copies last, they are available to DERA members at a cost of $12.00 (non-members $17.95) postpaid to the U.S. Additional postage to Canada or Mexico is $4.50. Airmail postage to other countries is $8.75. Send requests and payment to:

Mihir Bhatt Visits DERA

In mid-October, Mr. Mihir Bhatt, Director of the Disaster Mitigation Institute in India spent two days in Denver meeting with DERA members and exchanging views on emergency preparedness and hazard mitigation programs in both countries.

Mr. Bhatt, who holds a Master's degree from MIT in Urban Studies and Development Planning, also visited numerous federal, state and local emergency management offices throughout the U.S. under a fellowship sponsored by the Eisenhower Foundation. He met with FEMA Director James Lee Witt and discussed how a program such as Project Impact might be successfully applied in India.

While in Denver, Mr. Bhatt was hosted by DERA member Glen Nickel, who arranged meetings with Dr. Waverly Person, Director of the National Earthquake Information Center, Director Tommy Grier and his staff at the Colorado Office of Emergency Management, and Lynn Highland of the National Landslide Information Center in Golden, CO.

Glen and others from DERA provided Mr. Bhatt with overviews of comprehensive emergency management both from the perspective of governmental agencies and from that of non-governmental organizations (NGO's). A key element of concern expressed throughout the meeting was the difficulty in obtaining community consensus and commitment regarding hazard mitigation and preparedness projects, particularly when there is conflict with other development plans. Even with the resources of Project Impact, many communities have experienced difficulty executing meaningful mitigation projects.

An audio recording of the DERA panel meeting with Mr. Bhatt is available at the DERA web site in Real Audio format. Follow the "Audio Library File" link from:

Dodson Publishes Handbook

DERA member Lt. David W. Dodson of the Loveland, CO, Fire and Rescue Department was so alarmed by the number of firefighter deaths in America that he wrote a book to combat the problem. As a result, his book Fire Department Incident Safety Officer is at the top of the recommended reading list for firefighters working toward becoming certified as safety officers through the Fire Department Safety Officers Association.

Dodson's book got its start in the mid-1980s when 128 firefighters were killed in one year in the line of duty. Dodson notes that these figures represent deaths only, while the actual numbers of firefighters injured in the line of duty mount up into the tens of thousands.

Dodson's first step in combating this tragedy was to develop a checklist for safety officers and the four R's model--resources, risk, recon (reconnaissance or surveying the scene), and reporting. From this list Dodson proceeded to develop a safety class. Since then he has taught approximately 3,000 people in over 50 cities and published his book based on the experiences and interviews with firefighters from all over the country.

"The whole process was a labor of love," says Dodson. The book was written in off-duty time as were four chapters in a more recent firefighter handbook that Dodson has contributed to.

"I'd like to think that they [the books] are helping to cut down on firefighter deaths," says Dodson.

Lt. Dodson's book Fire Department Incident Safety Officer is available over the Internet at Amazon.com or at www.firesci.com.

E-journal Welcomes Articles

The new electronic journal American Emergency Management Response (AEMR) welcomes serious articles from emergency management professionals, academics, and members of government at all levels.

The AEMR electronic journal was created as a public service for individuals, scholars, and decision-makers concerned about emergency management. The Association for National Defense and Emergency Resources (ANDER) and the Department of Political Science at the University of Akron co-sponsor the e-journal.

Please submit articles in either electronic or paper copy. Electronic copies should be IBM compatible and in Word or WordPerfect format. Articles should be sent to acook@uakron.edu. For instructions for sending paper copies, please visit the AEMR Journal at www.uakron.edu/ander.

Amateur Radio Net

With the FCC amateur radio restructuring that took effect on April 15, 2000, I believe DERA should establish a net on 20 meters to facilitate our ability to communicate more effectively in time of disaster. I am considering establishing a net on a weeknight at 0400 Zulu in the hope that this time slot would perhaps accommodate the schedules of a majority of our interested members. However, before scheduling a firm time, I'd like the input of our amateur radio members to ensure that we choose a time that does not conflict with other important commitments.

Would amateur radio members please give me your thoughts on a time that would best accommodate the establishment of a radio net for our members throughout the world? Would a weeknight at 0400 Zulu accommodate our members' schedules? You may e-mail me at wa6uzp@juno.com with your suggestions.

Thanks for your thoughts on this important exercise of our disaster communication capabilities.

Jim Lucas, WA6UZP

The Care and Treatment of 911 Dispatchers

by

Rich Abrams

Whether you are the first at the scene or you are the first to be aware of a sudden worsening of an emergency situation, there are times when disaster personnel must be prepared to dial 911 for emergency assistance. It is, therefore, essential that you be ready to respond with concise, precise information to your 911 dispatcher's questions.

First, a trained 911 dispatcher will query you with a series of simple "who, what, when, where, why, and how" questions. Do give your official identity ("I am the emergency radio operator at the Red Cross shelter at the Santa Monica Civic Center.") so that your call will be given the credence and the priority service it warrants.

Second, if you are calling from a cell phone or via a repeater phone patch, be sure to give the correct, complete callback number. Unfortunately, the phone number that is displayed on your 911 dispatcher's computer screen may not be the actual number from which you are calling. For instance, in corporations the main number of the switchboard may display instead of the extension from which you are calling. So be certain to give the number from which you are calling, including extension or cell phone number.

Next, identify specifically what your needs are and precisely where emergency personnel should respond, i.e., "I'm at the baseball field at Smith High School where an explosion has just occurred. About 25 people are down and unconscious. Take the dirt driveway that goes behind the north side of the school to reach them."

Last of all, whenever possible, utilize alternative communications to contact police, fire, or EMS agencies. Mutual aid radio frequencies, fax machines, packet computer messages, and even runners can be used to carry the information. You should reserve the 911 line for only the most pressing of emergencies such as new events ("The Fifth Street bridge just collapsed."), traditional unit requests on an expedited basis ("The fire chief needs an additional three engines for the brush fire on the south side of the hill. Contact him on Channel 2."), and for priority one commands ("The mayor said to have city hall evacuated. Move all staff to the back-up site at the public works garage. The chemical spill is spreading.")

Follow the above simple guidelines to insure that you have an effective communication link to your 911 dispatcher. As with all equipment used during a disaster, professional training and operation can help eliminate confusion and misdirection.

Rich Abrams is a member of DERA, APCO, and the American Red Cross, and is a alarm and security dispatcher for Yale University in New Haven, Connecticut.

Late-Breaking News

ISDR Director Resigns in Protest

Philippe L Boulle' Director of the United Nations Secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR) will resign on 31 July 2000 in protest over what he perceives to be the efforts to incorporate the Secretariat as a subordinate component of OCHA.

Boulle' stated, "In my view, there has been increasing evidence that ISDR was being incorporated as a secondary component into the humanitarian and relief assistance activities of OCHA....The necessary authority and autonomy essential for the Secretariat to operate with distinct visibility as an inter-agency and multi-disciplinary platform for disaster reduction has not been forthcoming....the situation has been detrimental to the cause of disaster prevention itself."

Director Boulle' has been particularly concerned that the Secretariat operate not just as a humanitarian assistance organization but that it be involved in the development of sustainable interests within countries, a component of disaster reduction which he felt was "necessary to give equal weight to environmental, economic and social, and scientific and technological aspects of disaster reduction."
