

Law Library Research Fellow Application

The Research Fellows Program provides assistance to faculty. Professors routinely seek information for their scholarship that entails conducting research. The assignments vary in the type of research required and the time frame for completion. Because the research projects require various levels of expertise, the Fellows program will consider both novice researchers and students with more research experience. I recognize that 2Ls are not likely to have the same survey responses as 3Ls and do not expect any applicant's response to reflect research expertise.

1. List any legal research courses that you have taken and any in-class research instruction received in a law school class. Please include the name of the research instructor for your Lawyering class.

2. List any law school seminar classes taken and briefly describe your research assignment(s), i.e. one final paper, more than one project requiring legal research, topic(s) researched (title of your paper); length of paper(s); use of specialized resources (for example treatises, Cornell University Library databases, or other material).

3. List any legal research experience gained during jobs during the semester or over the summer. Provide the type of job (i.e. research assistant, clerk, intern, summer associate, or other) and the type of work you were assigned.

4. Do you have research experience from other graduate programs in business, economics, or other social sciences? Do you have research experience from pre-law school employment?

5. Have you used databases other than Westlaw and LexisNexis? If so, what online services have you used?

6. Submit/attach a writing sample of no more than three pages of a paper, brief, or memo. Click on "Submit " button. It will open your e-mail application. You should attach your writing sample there, which is in addition to the Application attached.

Thank you.
