

Sophomore Research Seminar and Scholars Research Seminar

2015 – 2016 Course Proposal Form

The goal of the Sophomore Research Seminar is to help students learn research and writing skills. Like the First-Year Preceptorial courses, this will be done through content-rich courses designed by instructors from throughout the college. Faculty proposing courses should consider both content and integration of research and writing skills. A description of the seminars and syllabus guidelines are posted on the Common Curriculum website.

Submit proposals and syllabus to education@union.edu.

Instructor name: _____

Application date: _____

Course title and description

(Students will select seminars based on the course descriptions.)

What will be the focus of the course? What topics or issues will be explored? What are some of the books or readings to be included?

Integration of research and writing skills

(This information will not be available to students.)

Teaching the seminar means integrating course content with instruction and guidance in research and writing. Briefly describe how you plan to do this. What learning objectives in these two areas will you emphasize? How do you plan to integrate research and writing skills into the content of your seminar? (For example, how will you sequence the research paper and what guidance will you provide for students as they research and write it?). See the SRS guidelines posted on the Common Curriculum website, particularly for the recommended learning outcomes.

Please submit a copy of your syllabus with this form.
