List new courses required for the new or revised curriculum. How do they support the overall program objectives of the major/minor/concentrations)? None

Explain, when appropriate, how this new/ revised curriculum supports the 10 goals of undergraduate education: <http://www.ugs.udel.edu/gened/>

The revision to the major will allow the student to 1.) attain effective skills in oral and written communication, quantitative reasoning, and the use of information technology. By taking the requirement for 4 courses of 300-level and 400-level literature, courses such as RUSS401- Advanced Grammar and Composition, RUSS325- Russian Civilization and Culture, and RUSS305- Russian Conversation and Composition, which are consistently offered in the program rotation, will be able to count towards the major. Each of these courses will offer ample practice in conversation and composition.

The revision will also 6.) develop the intellectual curiosity, confidence, and engagement that will lead to lifelong learning. Literature certainly does not appeal to all of our Russian Studies majors; as the title suggests, we have many students with interests and even double majors in Political Science, International Relations, Anthropology, Art History, even Music and Social Work. By allowing the students to take non-literature courses that will count towards graduation, the students will have the opportunity to explore many different and interesting aspects of Russian language, culture, history, film, etc. Students always do better work when the work truly interests them.

Finally, the revision will continue to do what the Russian Studies major already did: 10.) develop an international perspective in order to live and work effectively in an increasingly global society. Again, giving the students an opportunity to take non-literature courses that are not mere electives will allow them to get a broader, more comprehensive picture of Russian society and a better idea of how Russia fits into the global economy and global political culture.

Identify other units affected by the proposed changes:

None.

Describe the rationale for the proposed program change(s):

The Russian section is small; in order for a student to graduate with a Russian Studies major, the student must take nearly every course that is offered when it is offered. Each semester we offer one 300- and one 400-level. In the regular rotation of course appear non-literature courses; RUSS 401 (Advanced Grammar and Composition) is offered every fall, and RUSS 305 (Russian Conversation and Composition) and RUSS 325 (Russian Civilization and Culture) have been offered approximately every three semesters.

All students in the Russian Studies program, with the exception of those who happen to study abroad in the fall on a non-UD program, will take at least RUSS 401 and therefore, would not fulfill the major requirements as they are written. The other RUSS 4xx course would be literature. Most of the students with this major during recent years have gotten a substitution waiver from their Russian adviser in order to have RUSS 401 count towards graduation.

It is important to note that students do take literature courses; we offer RUSS 310 and RUSS 312 on a consistent basis in the rotation. In reality, students will have those two literature courses in addition to one 400-level literature course on their transcript by the time they graduate. Therefore, nine of the twelve credits would be literature for the majority of students. However, students who study abroad could present a problem if they do not take a literature course while there. If these students miss a RUSS 310 or RUSS 312, they, too, might not meet the literature requirements for graduation.

In summary, we propose that, since we do not offer the 400-level literature courses necessary to require six credits of literature, and to accommodate those who study abroad, we change the wording to allow for non-literature courses at the 300- and 400-levels to count for graduation.
