by Tim L. Waltner

Freeman city officials have agreed to dissolve the Freeman Community Center governing board that's been in place for nearly there years. The council voted to transfer furesight of the operation to the city at the commendation of John Koch, chair of the six-member board that has helped guide the development of the community center.

The building located on Winy Street was converted from a school gym and music/lunch room to a multi-use community facility after Freeman Public School gifted it to the city in 2010.

The building located on Wipf Street was covered from a school gym and music/lunch with the count of a multi-use community facility after Freeman Public School gifted it to the city in 2010.

The board was established by the city in early 2012, when then-Mayor Lonnie Tjaden named a panel to oversee the operation of the nommunity center, which officially sententher board was made up of two city center broard was made up of two city center broard in January of that year.
