

Workplace Violence

According to the Workplace Violence Research Institute, the aggregate cost of workplace violence to U.S. employers is estimated to be more than $36 billion as a result of expenses associated with lost business, productivity, litigation, medical care, psychiatric care, higher insurance rates, increased security measures, negative publicity and loss of employees. This fast paced program educates attendees on the causes, patterns and prevention of Workplace Violence. OSHA definitions and suggested recommendations for reducing the frequency and severity of incidents will be presented along with an actual case study which describes the organizational disruption of an event, the psychological effects on the staff, the associated workers compensation claim that arose, and the costs of the claim to the business owner.

All American businesses from varied sectors should work to develop and institute workplace violence prevention plans, not only those that may engage in high risk commerce. This program will set the ground work for the development and implementation of Workplace Prevention Plans as delivered by a recognized expert who is a member of the Department of Homeland Security's commercial Sector Coordinating Council.
