Culturally Relevant Teaching: Empowering Students

How do you empower students intellectually, socially, emotionally, and politically by using cultural referents to impart knowledge, skills, and attitudes? Culturally Relevant Teaching: Empowering Students will give hands-on experience with lessons to take back to your classrooms, schools, and districts that help bridge the home and school cultures of students. Within classrooms, cultivating humanity and celebrating diversity require attention both to individual and collective development. Engage in critical conversations about race, gender, class, and sexual orientation. Learn how to engage students in critical conversations. There is not a one-size-fits-all solution; however, this strand will help equip you with tools to empower students in your school and district.

Presented By: Bruce Lolling & Casey Meier

The presenter will be AVID national staff who have presented this strand at Summer Institute and other Regional Path trainings. AVID selects hundreds of national staff developers each year from the tens of thousands of applications received. AVID staff developers are trained and calibrated each year by AVID Center staff for the content of each strand that they provide. AVID trainings receive consistently high reviews from participants as being a highly engaging and powerful professional learning experience.
