

A CELEBRATED HISTORY

The Flamingo Conference Resort & Spa is as renowned today as a romantic Wine Country destination with links to Hollywood and Las Vegas glamour, as when it opened with a society-packed gala in 1957. Modern amenities, merged with the alluring ambiance of a 1950s summer resort, have ensured its continuing reputation as a society hotspot.

Mirroring the original Vegas Flamingo, designed by the Los Angeles modernist architect George Vernon Russell, the clean horizontal lines, curving glass curtain walls, planes of rugged staggered stone and "Flamingo" tower were all repeated.

In Hollywood, the Flamingo was considered the place to stay north of the Bay. Movie stars like Jayne Mansfield (pictured below) sunned themselves by the pool. Cast and production crews continue to use the resort as their central Wine Country headquarters and as an enchanting filming location.

The Flamingo has been privately-owned and family-run for more than 35 years. In 1996, the City of Santa Rosa declared the hotel a historic landmark.
