EXPLANATORY NOTES:

- (A) Students, having completed their Family Medicine Clinical Clerkship, in which they spent six weeks in a practice, usually rural, are unanimous in stating that working in a group practice gives them a much better experience than working in a single-handed practice. The variety of experience is usually greater and they enjoy different styles of practice.
- (B) With the expansion of distributed medical education, there is a need to recruit and retain preceptors in both urban and rural environments.
- (C) This is considered an essential condition, given the increasing distribution of medical learners in the Province.
