One in three children lose contact with a parent following separation or divorce

The distress caused by family breakup is often traumatic, heart wrenching and sometimes bitter. The needs of children during this time are often lost and the pain of losing contact with a mother or father, brother, sister or grandparents is known to have a lasting effect for children in their adult life.

Each year over fifteen thousand children use NACCC child contact centres and services. NACCC is a national child-centred charity that promotes and supports safe child contact within a national framework of around 350 child contact centres and services.

Help us to continue to enable children to spend time with their family by supporting us in our work.
