Engineering Safety Management and the Common Safety Method for Risk Evaluation and Assessment

In the past, engineers and managers who needed introduction to the management of safety within engineering change projects for railways had access to the United Kingdom's "Yellow Book", which provided very useful and authoritative grounding and guidance. The book was supported through the provision of Yellow Book courses, provided under the oversight of RSSB. Following the withdrawal of the Yellow Book and also the enactment of Common Safety Method (CSM) regulation that applies across Europe, Edif ERA has developed a new two-day training course that provides an up-to-date and authoritative introduction.

This two-day course is intended for both managers and safety practitioners who require a thorough grounding in the fundamentals of Engineering Safety Management, and advice on the practical application of the new CSM regulation. The material presented aligns with all current guidance published by RSSB and the Office of Rail Regulation and also draws on material available from other sectors.

How does this course relate to the Yellow Book?

Prospective delegates will be aware that the Yellow Book has been withdrawn, as it no longer represents best practice guidance. However, a great deal of the material within the book remains relevant. RSSB has published updated guidance and is developing this further. The course includes an opportunity to discuss the various developments and the sources of the most up-to-date information.

Already Yellow Book trained?

For people who simply need to update their knowledge, Edif ERA also offers a one-day Common Safety Method course which includes an update of industry-related safety information
