Report Synopsis:-

In mid 2009, there are some indications that the decline in economic performance overall has 'bottomed out', with an increasing number of industry commentators anticipating a 'U-shaped' recovery in the following 6-12 months. Whilst the recession remains deep, there are some small, tentative, yet positive signs of a return to improved economic performance in the coming months through to the end of 2009. Though consumer confidence remains at a low ebb, current trends within the wider retail sector suggest a resilience from consumers to the economic downturn with like for like retail sales rising 4.6% in April 2009.

There are a number of key market drivers evident in the underfloor heating industry which are offering healthy levels of optimism for the UFH market in the near to medium term. Fundamentally, there are a wide range of key target markets for UFH installations both within the domestic and non-domestic sectors and these, coupled with an improving economy should underpin healthy levels of growth for the market and promote optimism for underfloor heating suppliers in terms of future prospects.
