Brenda Banks

My work is based on personal journeys, the changing landscape and earth's textual layers caused by volcanic activity. With a BFA Glass major, I wished to extend my knowledge in different technical skills and to explore blown forms, texture and colour, I completed three more years of study in Glass Design and Production.

Lewis Batchelar

I employ multiple cold-working techniques to cut through and reveal layers of colour to create depth in each work. The process is long and laborious, but also very exciting as I get to see the designs I have sketched on paper, slowly come to life and take on a three-dimensional form.

I'm passionate about the process of hot glass and being able to resolve various techniques. Every piece is different because of the way I manipulate the lines and use of canes; 16 years of glass making and still loving it.

Flame-working your own beads is an art in itself, daring to be different with a variety of techniques. I love the alternatives, breaking boundaries with shape and design. Join me throughout the year or over Festival Week. Lessons available all year round.

What draws me to the design and production of glass forms is the formal qualities within design principles: point, line and plane and the use of colour.

Kate Dobbs

After 20 years working predominantly with textiles, I find glass by its very nature allows for a new expression of ideas with a strong design focus. My work is mostly an assemblage of pieces that reflects a two-dimensional vision rendered in a three-dimensional object, influenced by minimalist form to convey a contemporary style.

As a self-taught glass artist, I always seem to be working to the limit of my abilities. My sculptural necklaces are one-off originals, made up of leaves, buds, flowers and fruit – on occasion a butterfly or chrysalis may make an appearance. They are in private collections worldwide.

I have a compelling urge to hand engrave the surfaces of my blown vessels. This allows me to unfold a sense of optical mystery within my work. I use simple form and uncomplicated colour to not only unfold these qualities with a minimum of complexities but to also create a beautiful object.

Wanganui has the stamp of approval from the arts community nationally and internationally. Artists practising Fine Arts discipline including drawing and painting, glass, sculpture and pottery compliment traditional cultural and heritage crafts have created a vibrant and supportive group for the amateur or budding artist who want to take their own art somewhere. The professionals are happy to share their time and talent and as a novice myself, I am so grateful to this community of artists for their encouragement. We have a fine collection of art in our Sarjeant Gallery and people who want to look at art may choose to visit certain other locations as well, but those who want to take their own art somewhere should take the measure of Whanganui and it's arts scene."
