Life of Pi

Richard Parker did not jump into the water after me. The car I intended to use as a club floated. I held on to it as I reached for the lifebuoy, now vacant of its previous occupant. It was terrifying to be in the water. It was black and cold and in a rage. I felt as if I were at the bottom of a crumbling well. Water kept crashing down on me. It stung my eyes. I pulled me down. I could hardly breathe. If there hadn't been the lifebuoy I wouldn't have lasted a minute.

I saw a triangle slicing the water fifteen feet away. It was a shark's fin. An awful single, cold and liquid, went up and down my spine. I swam as fast as I could to one end of the lifeboat, the end still covered by the tarpaulin. I pushed myself up on the lifebuoy with my arms. I couldn't see Richard Parker. He wasn't on the tarpaulin or on a bench. He was at the bottom of the lifeboat. I pushed myself up again. All I could see, briefly, at the other end, was the shark's head thrashing about. As I fell back into the water another shark's fin glided right before me.

The bright orange tarpaulin was held down by a strong nylon rope that wove its way between metal grommets in the tarpaulin and blunt hooks on the side of the boat. I happened to be treading water at the bow. The tarpaulin was not as securely fixed going over the stern - which had a very short pole, what in a face would be called a snub nose - as it was elsewhere around the boat. There was a little loosening in the tarpaulin as the rope went from one hook on one side of the stern to the next hook on the other side. I lifted the car in the air and I showed its handle into the sea, so, into this lifebuoy detail. I pushed the car in as far as it would go. The lifebuoy now had a prow projecting over the waves, if crookedly. I pulled myself up and wrapped my legs around the car. The car handle pushed up against the tarpaulin, but tarpaulin, rope and car held. I was out of the water, if only by a fluctuating two, three feet. The crest of the larger waves kept striking me.

I was alone and orphaned, in the middle of the Pacific, hanging on to an car, an adult tiger in front of me, sharks beneath me, a storm raging about me. Had I considered my prospects in the light of reason, I surely would have given up and let go of the car, hoping that I might drown before being eaten. But I don't recall that I had a single thought during those first minutes of relative safety. I didn't even notice daybreak. I held on to the car. I just held on. God only knows why.

After a while I made good use of the lifebuoy. I lifted it out of the water and put the car through its hole. I worked it down until the ring was hugging me. Now it was only with my legs that I had to hold on. If Richard Parker appeared, it would be more awkward to drop from the car, but one error at a time, Pacific before tiger.

The elements allowed me to go on living. The lifeboat did not sink. Richard Parker kept up of sight. The sharks prowled but did not lunge. The waves splashed me but did not pull me off.

I watched the ship as it disappeared with much burbling and beeping. Light flickered and went out. I looked about for my family, for survivors, for another lifebuoy, for anything that might bring me hope. There was nothing. Only rain, marauding waves of black ocean and the flossing of tragedy.

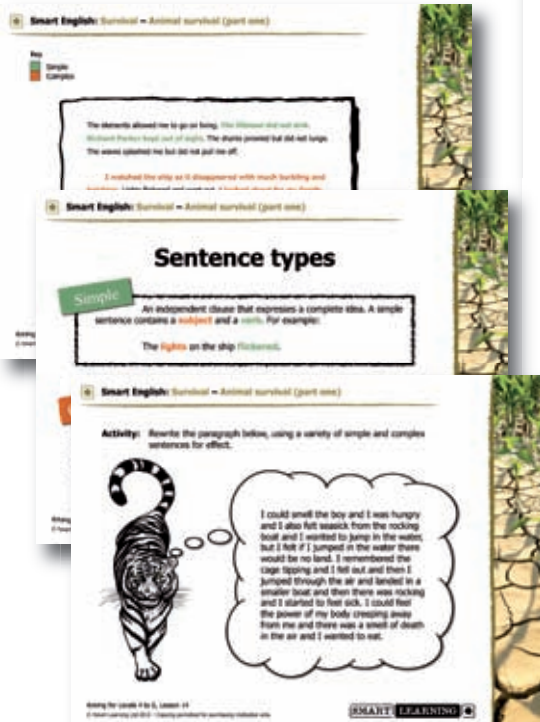

The darkness melted away from the sky. The rain stopped.
