

Student Uniforms

Today, let's talk about student uniforms - what students wear to school, college or university. Depending on the country you live in and its habits may determine whether students wear a uniform or not.

In Britain schoolchildren wear a uniform to school. It installs a form of discipline in them that is valuable in later life. If a girl wears a skirt that is too high on the hemline or too tight a pair of trousers she will be sent home to solve the issue. Come in with a funny haircut and a student will be pulled out of the class, reprimanded and sent home. In Britain students do not wear uniforms to college or university.

In Slovakia, a country in Central Europe, schoolchildren don't wear any uniform. They dress how they want, have hairstyles as they want. There is a complete lack of student uniform etiquette. The rich kids all wear expensive designer clothes, including Nike sports shoes or similar, the poor not so expensive clothes and shoes from Tesco. Kids wear all sorts of different hairstyles including Punk rock styles; with no one batting an eyelid.

In the Philippines all schoolchildren wear a uniform. Surprisingly even college students in their twenties also wear a uniform. Can you imagine that happening in England or Slovakia? College students would simply laugh at you!

Student uniform reduces the difference between rich and poor. It helps teach the student about student etiquette e.g. what is allowed and not allowed, which might help them in later life.

At the end of the day should a student wear a uniform or not? It remains a hot topic of conversation with lawmakers. Different nationalities, cultures, parents and students each offer different perspectives on this issue.
