Marine wildlife is under immediate threat from pollution, climate change, over-fishing and other activities impacting on our oceans.

Through conservation research and education, we can understand the impact mankind is having on the marine environment and identify solutions to safeguard its future.

Conserving Marine Wildlife Through Research and Education

- ◆ MARINELife is a UK-based charity that conducts scientific research on whales, dolphins and seabirds in the oceans of North-West Europe through a core team of professional staff, trained volunteers and a network of supporters.
- ◆ We use our research to inform decision-makers on the status of the marine environment and conservation measures required.

Whales and dolphins are under many threats, including fishery interaction, climate change and pollution

Help us continue our scientific research providing information to help safeguard these animals in the English Channel, the Bay of Biscay and beyond

www.marine-life.org.uk

Our core work since 1995 has been in researching the distribution, abundance and population trends for whales, dolphins and seabirds from commercial vessels in the Channel, Bay of Biscay, North Sea, Irish Sea and beyond.

We also believe strongly that engaging local communities to reinforce their passion about wildlife is a key success factor in marine conservation and as such local boat operators and the public play a vital part in our coastal projects.

Public awareness of marine wildlife is a vital part of MARINELife's role and to date over 1 million people have been part of our education work which is striving to foster a new appreciation for the marine environment.

Key research projects for MARINELife include:

- ◆ Studying White-Beaked Dolphin and Bottlenose Dolphin population dynamics through targeted and opportunistic surveys and photo-identification
- ◆ Partnering with commercial vessel operators and other like-minded organisations and universities to generate meaningful scientific data for use by policy-makers
- ◆ Researching critically endangered Balearic Shearwaters in the Channel to understand the factors explaining their presence during the summer months
