

Name: _____ Class: _____ Date: _____

Affect vs. Effect

Available as a PDF at scholastic.com/scope!

When you're writing, it's easy to confuse affect and effect. They might sound similar, but they're not the same word!

Affect is a verb.

Examples:

I hope my honesty doesn't affect how you feel about me.

My new espresso maker will drastically affect my daily coffee consumption.

Effect is often used as a noun.

Examples:

The new lotion had a great effect on my skin.

What will be the effect of the school's new dress code?

Directions: In the sentences below, decide whether to use affect or effect. Fill in the blanks with the correct word. Add a suffix if necessary (-ed or -s).

1. Poetry _____ different people in different ways.
2. It's impossible to measure the _____ on the human heart of a Shakespearean sonnet or a verse by Emily Dickinson.
3. One of poetry's _____ can be to make you see things in a new way.
4. Perhaps a metaphor comparing an eagle to a warplane can _____ how you think about birds.
5. Some people are _____ by humorous poetry.
6. Humor sometimes has the _____ of making difficult topics easier to understand.
7. The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock had a profound _____ on me.
8. How does poetry _____ you?