Blame it on Generation Y: Watches have gotten much cooler. “To appeal to the younger generation we’re using watches with techie features such as chronographs and retrograde date movements,” says Anthony Farello, president of Pedre Promotional Products Inc., a watch supplier. Also becoming increasingly popular are oversized watches, watches with large leather cuff straps and clip-on timepieces.

Another trend to note, according to Farello: “We’re seeing women’s watches being marketed separately from men’s. An identical pair is no longer required.” When making a watch purchase, many go the diamond route, but Farello says one shouldn’t discount sporty timepieces as a corporate gift. “People have more active lifestyles these days, and they want their watches to match their lives,” he says.
