Keep Our
NHS Public

JOIN US ON THE MARCH, London, SATURDAY November 3

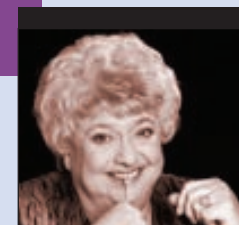

In 2008 the NHS will reach its 60th birthday: but the celebrations for our most popular public service will take place alongside protests against cuts, closures, job losses and the piecemeal privatisation of hospital and primary care services that have gathered pace in the last five years.

Both aspects will take place side by side at the national demonstration that has been called by the NHS Together trade unions in London on November 3. Keep Our NHS Public is happy to support the march: we agree that the NHS is to be both celebrated and defended.

We are not among those who take joy in attacking and criticising the NHS and exploiting its every problem in order to argue the case for privatisation or private health insurance: we believe the NHS is fantastic value for money, providing a unique service that the private sector could never have developed.

But we are also alarmed that misguided government “reforms” are undermining the very fabric of the NHS, fostering a new, parasitic private sector, and threatening the future of vital services.

“The NHS was a beautiful invention that took the fear out of getting healthcare. “We must do everything we can to ensure that it is not undermined. “If you can, do something positive to support this campaign.”

– Claire Rayner

Why we think the NHS is such great value

■ The NHS maintains a skilled and dedicated workforce of 1.2 million, combining doctors, nurses, professional staff and many more skilled clinical and non-clinical support staff who make the system tick.

■ It has developed a national network of hospitals, health centres, and community-based services, with resources allocated on the basis of meeting health needs, not maximising profit. Large NHS district general and teaching hospitals offer a full range of services, while private hospitals are tiny – averaging just 40 beds – and offer a narrow range of services to a limited section of the population. When things go wrong, private hospitals ship their patients ... to A&E and the care of the NHS!

■ The NHS runs vital 24-hour emergency services – ambulances and A&E departments – that the private sector does not even pretend to provide, because they do not offer any prospect of a profit.

■ NHS primary care services offer millions of consultations and treatment – free of charge: and tens of millions still enjoy free prescriptions – we think ALL prescriptions should be free, as is now the case in Wales.

■ The NHS offers swift access to life-saving treatment for cancer and heart problems, saving thousands of lives each year.

■ The NHS is the body that trains and educates health professionals and doctors offering a career structure for medical staff: and it leads vital research into new techniques, drugs and treatments.

Keep Our NHS Public is pleased to join those celebrating all these aspects of the NHS: but we also support the tens and hundreds of thousands who have been campaigning against local cash-driven cutbacks, closures, job losses and misguided policies of privatisation of hospital and primary care services, and the ruinously expensive Private Finance Initiative.

WE SUPPORT the trade unions who correctly opposed Foundation Trusts as a step to a 2-tier health service – the first wave of 59 Foundation Trusts are now sitting on surpluses totalling almost £1 billion, while other Trusts and Primary Care Trusts are making cuts in service to balance their books, including damaging cuts in mental health and care of the elderly.

WE SUPPORT the campaigners who have tried to halt the development of profit-seeking “Independent Sector Treatment Centres”, which charge above the NHS tariff for treating the most minor and uncomplicated cases, but which enjoy guaranteed long-term contracts: their growing share of the NHS budget is now beginning to destabilise local NHS Trusts.

WE HAVE SUPPORTED campaigners in

Derbyshire and elsewhere who have fought to stop contracts for GP services being handed to US-run multinational companies looking to get their hands on the £64 billion NHS commissioning budget.

And we have consistently argued against each element in the government “reforms” which have fragmented the NHS and made it more like a competitive market, and less like the national, planned, universal and comprehensive public service established when the NHS was formed in 1948.

This market-style system is driving the controversial local hospital cuts and closures that have brought hundreds of thousands of people onto the streets in protest in the last two years. But it's clear that a huge section of the population agrees on the need to Keep Our NHS and its services intact – and keep it Public.

IF YOU share our support for the NHS and its values, and our opposition to the expensive and bureaucratic reforms and privatisation pursued by the government since 2000, make sure you JOIN THE MARCH on November 3. And why not join Keep Our NHS Public as an individual member, get your trade union or local community group to affiliate, and help us build the resistance, and build local groups that can fight to defend our NHS.
