INCOGNITO, a special performance by...

Michael Sidney Fosberg

Fosberg is an actor, teacher, and writer with a one-man show that deals with issues of race, diversity, identity, adoption, and much more.

INCOGNITO is a dynamic and dramatic teaching tool. Award-winning actor/writer Michael Fosberg's autobiographical play, Incognito, takes diversity training to a dramatically different level. His extraordinary story is engaging on a deeply personal level, exploring how quickly and easily perceptions can be challenged. After 30 years of thinking he was "white," Michael uncovers his biological father and discovers he is "black." The result is a deeply moving one-man performance that has broad-based appeal with corporate audiences.

- The show speaks to real life issues of race, identity, gender, age, and biases, offering employees an opportunity to discover shared experiences.
- Challenging identity preconceptions is thought-provoking and change-inducing.
- Storytelling bestows individuals and corporations with a profound sense of identity.
- Studies have shown people learn and absorb a great deal more through the use of the arts.
- The format of the performance offers a chance for REAL dialogue in a way lectures, speakers, and group exercises do not.

In addition to performing his dramatic personal story in which he portrays more than a dozen different characters, Michael gently guides groups across topics the play exposes: stereotypes, biases, micro-inequities, identity and more.
