

Divorce Information and Worksheet

Instructions: This worksheet is designed to be used by persons contemplating a divorce. It may also be used by your attorney. Completing this form before your initial interview with your attorney may save you valuable time and money.

Part 1 - Definitions – Terms and Explanations

Definitions - Terms and Explanations
1. Complaint	The pleading used to commence a divorce action that is filed with the court clerk, usually in the county of residence of the parties.
2. Petition	Same as complaint. Some States use the term Petition instead of complaint.
3. Plaintiff Or Petitioner	The person who files the complaint. May be called Petitioner if a Petition is used instead of a complaint. If a Joint Complaint is allowed, the parties may be called Co-Plaintiffs or Co-Complainants.
4. Defendant Or respondent	The person who the complaint is filed against. This person is usually required to answer the complaint within a certain number of days, or file a waiver to the complaint. After the complaint is filed, the defendant is usually served with a copy of the complaint and a summons directing the defendant to answer the complaint.
5. Co-Plaintiffs	When both parties sign the complaint in a divorce action it is called a Joint Complaint or Joint Petition. Some states allow Joint complaints and some do not.
6. Summons	This is a document signed by the Court Clerk and served on the defendant. It informs the defendant that a complaint has been filed and directs the defendant to file an answer within the required time.
7. Cover Sheet	Some states require a cover sheet to be filed with the complaint, petition or joint complaint which provides basic information about the parties and the action. These are used by the court for easy reference and also sometimes for statistic reporting. Some clerks will supply you with the required cover sheet and others will direct you to where a copy can be obtained.
8. Information Sheet	Same as Cover Sheet. Some states use the term Information sheet instead of cover sheet.
9. Waiver of Process	In cases where the defendant does not desire to file an answer, or where the defendant agrees to the divorce, the defendant will file a waiver of process. In states that allow a waiver of process, the waiver takes the place of the summons and no summons is issued to you by the clerk when the complaint is filed.
10. Entry of Appearance	Often the defendant will include an entry of appearance with the waiver of process and the forms are sometimes combined into a single form. The entry basically provides that the defendant enters his or her appearance in the case and may consent to an entry of divorce.
11. Court Clerk	Courts have clerks who handle the court papers, hearings and other matters. A complaint is filed with the Court clerk usually in the county of residence of the parties. The clerk is the clerk of the court who handles domestic matters in your county, such as the chancery clerk, Family Court Clerk, etc. There may be more than one clerk in your county for different types of courts.
12. Waiting Period	Some states have a waiting period from the time of filing the complaint before the matter may be heard or a final judgment entered. If so, you cannot set the case for trial or present a judgment of divorce until the waiting period has expired.

Definitions - Terms and Explanations

13. Final Judgment	The form which concludes the divorce is called a final judgment, i.e. Final Judgment of Divorce or Dissolution of Marriage. It is presented to the Court after all requirements to obtain the divorce have been met. In a no-fault case, the final judgment may attach and incorporate the terms of a settlement agreement or recite the provisions of a filed settlement agreement. Same as Decree.
14. Dissolution	Some states use the term dissolution of marriage instead of divorce. In those States, the complaint and judgment will provide "Complaint for Dissolution of Marriage" or "Final Judgment of Dissolution of Marriage."
15. Declaration	Same as Complaint or Petition. Some States use the term declaration instead of Complaint or Petition.
16. Military Affidavit	Under a Federal Soldiers and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, a divorce action may not be allowed to proceed if the defendant is in the active military service. This affidavit states that the defendant is not in the active military service and is required to be filed in most States in order to show the Court that the action can proceed because the defendant is not in the military.
17. UCJA	Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act - An act adopted by most states determining which state's courts have jurisdiction over custody matters.
18. Joint Custody	Some States allow joint custody in certain cases where both parents are entitled to care for and obtain information about the children. Support may still be paid and joint custody may be equal or divided. Some courts do not favor joint custody while others routinely accept it. Joint custody does not necessarily mean equal time parenting. Depending on your state's definition, it may simply mean both parents have meaningful involvement.
19. Physical Custody	In States that use this term, it means the parent that will have physical custody of the children. The other parent has visitation rights. The term Joint Physical Custody is also used.
20. Legal Custody	In some States, legal custody means that although one parent may have physical custody, both parents have joint legal custody and are equally entitled to make decisions regarding the health, care and general welfare of the children, as well as have equal access to all information concerning the children. Parties may have Joint Legal custody.
21. Custodial Parent	Same as parent with physical custody.
22. Non-Custodial Parent	Parent that does not have physical custody.
23. Child Support	Amount of money usually paid to the custodial parent for the maintenance and support of the children.
24. Child Support Factors	In determining the amount of child support to be paid, the Courts and statutes have looked to child support factors to determine the amount of support, such as the income of the parties, age of children, etc.
25. Child Support Guidelines	All states now have child support guidelines to assist the Court and parties in calculating the amount of child support that should be paid. If the guidelines are followed, the chance of having the support amount the parties agree to approved is increased. If the child support guidelines are not followed, reasons must be provided as to why there should be a deviation from the guidelines in the case. The deviation may be more or less than the guidelines.
26. Visitation	Right of the non-custodial parent to visit with the children, i.e. every other weekend.
27. Settlement Agreement	Agreement between husband and wife settling all property, child support, custody, and other issues.

Definitions - Terms and Explanations

28. Residency Requirement	The length of time one or both parties reside in the State before a divorce action may be filed.
29. No-Fault	Uncontested agreed divorce.
30. Contested	Divorce where one party does not consent to the divorce.
31. Jurisdiction	The basis for the Court to hear a case.
32. Venue	The proper county in which to file the divorce.
33. Cooling Off Period	Required time interval between the date of filing and entry of divorce.
34. Financial Statement	Statement of parties' assets, liabilities, and net worth. Some states also include income and expenses.
35. Filing Fee	A fee that is paid at the time of filing of the complaint.
36. Child Support Worksheet	Worksheet used to evaluate child support to comply with child support guidelines.
37. Uncontested	Agreed divorce or divorce where defendant does not appear.
38. Separate Property	Property not considered marital property.
39. Marital Property	Property acquired during the marriage.
40. Equitable Distribution	Division of marital property between husband and wife.
41. Joint Property	Property owned by husband and wife equally.
42. Answer	Pleading filed to respond to a divorce complaint.
43. Discovery	Fact-finding process that takes place after the divorce complaint has been filed, in order to allow the parties in the case to prepare for settlement or trial.
44. Interrogatories	Written discovery questions from one party to another.
45. Deposition	Oral questions from one party to another.
46. Request for Admissions	Written questions in the form of asking a party to admit truth.
47. Fault Grounds	Basis for divorce, such as adultery.
48. No-Fault Grounds	Basis for divorce where there is no need to prove actual fault.
49. Irreconcilable Differences	A typical no-fault ground for divorce.
50. Irretrievably Broken	Same as irreconcilable differences.
51. Deadlines	Time within which action must be taken, such as filing an answer.
52. Hearing	Presenting testimony before the judge.
53. Pleading	Documents such as the complaint, answer, etc.
54. Joint Complaint	Complaint filed by both husband and wife.
55. Alimony/spousal support/maintenance	Monetary award for the support of dependant spouse.

Part 17. Typical No Fault Procedures

No Fault Procedures

1. A Complaint, Petition or Joint Complaint is filed in the County of your residence. Some states allow a joint complaint while others do not. In states that do not allow a joint complaint, one party will file a complaint or petition for divorce or dissolution of marriage.
2. At the time of filing the complaint a filing fee is paid. Some courts require a cover sheet providing basic information about the case. Ask your clerk for this form if the clerk states one is required.
3. If you are using a Complaint instead of a joint complaint, the defendant will be served with a summons to answer the complaint or will execute a waiver of summons and entry of appearance. Some states require that a summons be issued, while others will allow a defendant to file a waiver. Ask your clerk.
4. If a summons is required, the Defendant may file an answer admitting that a divorce should be granted based upon an agreement of the parties. An answer is not required in all states.
5. After the complaint and the waiver or answer are filed, you need to determine how to present a judgment of divorce to the court. Some states have a waiting period, such as no judgment may be presented until 60 days after the complaint is filed.
6. After the waiting period has expired, ask the clerk or court administrator for the proper procedure to present the judgment to the judge. Some states require an actual hearing, some will allow the divorce to be presented on affidavit and others require no evidence beyond the contents of the complaint.
7. Present the Separation Agreement and Judgment to the Judge.

Part 18 - Witness Testimony

Summary: Some states require actual testimony, even in a no fault divorce. The sample below is only a sample of questions that a witness may be asked in an uncontested divorce.

12. I am presenting to the Court today a Final Judgment of Divorce which incorporates the terms of our agreement and asking the court to enter same if it is in acceptable form and content.

Part 20 - Complete if Child Custody will be contested (add questions and answers you determine or think are relevant).

Summary: When custody of the children is contested, the courts look to various factors to determine who best can care for the health, education and welfare of the children. Although factors vary to some degree from state to state (and particular judge), the primary factors are more or less uniform as a practical matter. Below are statements/factors to consider:

1. Age of the Children.
2. Sex of the Children.
3. Education level of the children.
4. Recommendations from others to the court.
5. History of child violence
6. Mental and Physical condition of the parents.
7. Mental and Physical condition of the children.
8. Preference of child of later years. i. e. 12 above, 14 above.
9. Stability of home environment offered by each parent.
10. Ability each parent displays to cooperate with the other parent regarding the children.
11. Possibility of children being removed from the home and residence and effect, if any, on the children.
12. Material needs of the Children.
13. Emotional connection between children and each parent.

inappropriate or unjust outcome. In most states, should the court determine that the application of the guidelines would be unjust or inappropriate, the court is required to state in writing the amount due under the guidelines and the specific reasons for deviating from the guidelines. The courts will often also require that the party receiving child support acknowledge the amount which would have been due under the guidelines. In addition, most states require that health insurance be maintained for the child if reasonably available from a party's employer or other means, or require the party to obtain such insurance as soon as it becomes reasonably available.

Some of the factors the court may consider in deviating from child support guidelines include:

1. The financial means, circumstances and standard of living of both parents;
2. The financial means and circumstances of the child;
3. The standard of living the child would have enjoyed had the marriage continued;
4. The age, health, emotional and physical condition of each parent;
5. The age, health, emotional and physical condition of the child;
6. The material and educational needs of the child;
7. Custody arrangements for the child, including day care costs.

The above listed factors are just some of the issues that may be considered by the court and are in no way exclusive. The court may consider any factor it deems relevant and the child's best interests will always be the court's main consideration.

In most states, an award of child support terminates upon the child reaching the age of majority, although many states include provisions which permit the award to continue should the child remain in school.

Part 22. - Visitation

Summary: When minor children are involved in a divorce action, both parents must be mindful of the effects of divorce upon children and should therefore resolve to arrange a visitation schedule which encourages the child to develop meaningful relationships with both parties. The parents should also understand that visitation is not an issue to be used as a weapon against the other spouse, but rather a tool to be used to assist the child in his or her healthy development as a person. It is in the child's best interests to have a frequent, meaningful, and continuing relationship with both parents. For children to make an adequate adjustment to the divorce, the children must be allowed to continue their relationship with both parents without experiencing post-divorce conflict between their parents. If necessary, both parents should consider mediation or counseling as a way to resolve any thorny issues which prevent the parties from amicably resolving their differences.

The following are several guiding principles which each parent should consider in constructing a visitation schedule for the child:

1. Visitation should be pleasant for the children and for the parent. Visitation should help the children maintain a good relationship with the non-custodial parent.
2. Visitation should provide meaningful personal contact for both the visiting parent and the children.
3. Visitation should not be used to check on the other parent and the children should not be questioned for information about the other parent.
4. Both parents should strive to agree on matters pertaining to the children, including discipline, so that one parent is not undermining the other parent's efforts.

When drafting visitation arrangements between parents, there are many issues that will arise that the parents should attempt to resolve in the initial agreement regarding visitation. Steps taken now to resolve future conflicts will benefit both parents and children alike. Examples of such issues and suggested ways of resolving them include:

1. Conflicts Between Regular Weekend, Holiday, and Extended Summer Visitation.

When there is a conflict between a holiday weekend/summer visitation and the regular weekend visitation, the parents should agree on the method of resolving the conflict ahead of time to prevent any conflict that might arise. A suggested method of resolving the conflict is that the holiday/summer visitation would take precedence and the regular visitation schedule would resume the following weekend. This type of agreement would prevent any problems from arising if the non-custodial parent misses a regular weekend because of holiday/summer visitation.

2. Appropriate Conduct By Parents.

Oftentimes in divorces, particularly when the divorce is not amicable, children are subjected to conduct by the parents which is not conducive to developing harmonious relationships with each parent. Parents should at all times avoid speaking negatively about each other and should firmly discourage such conduct by relatives or friends. Each parent also should encourage the children to support the other parent. These basic rules of conduct and discipline should be the baseline standard for both parents, and consistently enforced by both, so that the children do not receive mixed signals.

3. Parental Communication.

Parents should agree at all times to keep each other advised of their home and work addresses and telephone numbers. So far as possible, all communication concerning the children should be conducted between the parents in person, or telephonically at their residences (and not at their places of employment). Every effort should be made to ensure that the parties cooperate with each other and keep each other informed and abreast of any event relating to the child.

4. Grade Reports and Medical Information.

Over the course of time, there will be many occasions in which reports, exams and other information regarding the child are produced. The parents should come to an agreement by which the grade reports, notices from school, medical reports, etc. are shared with the non-custodial parent as they are received and permit the non-custodial parent to communicate concerning the children directly with the school and with the children's doctors and other professionals, outside the presence of the custodial parent. Each parent should agree to immediately notify the other of any medical emergencies or serious illnesses of the children. The custodial parent should agree to notify the non-custodial parent of all school or other events (like Church or Scouts) involving parental participation. If the children are taking medications, the custodial parent should provide the non-custodial parent with a sufficient amount of the child's medicine and appropriate instructions regarding such medication during visitation.

5. Visitation Clothing.

In an effort to resolve any issues relating to the clothing of the child during visitation, the custodial parent should agree to send an appropriate supply of the children's clothing with the child during visits, which shall be returned clean (when reasonably possible), with the children, by the non-custodial parent. The non-custodial parent should agree to notify the custodial parent, as far in advance as possible, of any special activities so that the appropriate clothing may be sent.

6. Visitation or Support Disputes.

Because it is in the child's best interest to have frequent, meaningful and continuing contact with his or her parents, both parents should agree and understand that neither visitation nor child support is to be withheld because of either parent's failure to comply with a court order. The children have a right to both support and visitation, neither of which is dependent upon the other. In other words, failure to pay support should not mean no visitation and no visitation should not mean no support. If there is a violation of either a visitation or a support order, the parents must agree that their exclusive remedy is to apply to the court for appropriate sanctions, and not punish the child for the acts of either parent.

7. Adjustments to This Visitation Schedule.

Although a rather specific schedule should be drawn up regarding child visitation, the parties should agree to fairly modify visitation when family necessities, illnesses or commitments reasonably so require. The requesting party should give as much notice as circumstances permit in order to prevent any unnecessary problems from arising.

8. Pickup and Drop-off.

One of the biggest sources of conflict arising out of visitation is the pick-up and drop-off of children. Unless other arrangements are made, the parties should agree that the non-custodial parent should pick up the children at the times specified and return them at the times specified. The custodial parent should have the children ready for visitation at the time they are to be picked up and should agree to be present at the home to receive the children at the time they are returned, unless provisions are made for grandparents, current spouses or other appropriate adults known to the children to be present. Each parent should agree to be responsible and as punctual as possible regarding this issue to minimize conflict.

9. Extracurricular Activities. Children are often involved in sports, lessons, and other extracurricular activities which are generally to their benefit and enjoyment. Each parent must recognize that a reasonable amount of extracurricular activities are generally assumed to be in the children's best interests and should therefore attempt to be as flexible as possible in order to accommodate the children's extracurricular activity schedules. Extracurricular activities should not supersede summer visitation with non-custodial parents, however, nor should they be used as a method by which to deny access to the non-custodial parent. In recognition of the scheduling difficulties that can be caused by children's extracurricular activities, the custodial parents should act in good faith in attempting to schedule such extracurricular activities as not to unreasonably infringe upon the non-custodial parent's access to the children. Likewise, the non-custodial parent should act in good faith in attempting to assist in transportation needs and in accommodating the children's extracurricular schedules as much as reasonably possible. Good faith communication by the parents is essential with regard to the difficult issue of the scheduling of children's extracurricular activities.

10. Notice of Canceled Visitation. It is inevitable that there will be occasions when visitation must be cancelled or shortened due to an unforeseen event or occurrence. In order to minimize the inconvenience to the other parent, whenever possible, the affected parent should agree to give a minimum of three (3) days notice of his or her intent not to exercise all or part of the scheduled visitation. When such notice is not reasonably possible, the maximum notice permitted by the circumstances, and the reason therefore, should be given. The custodial parent should give the same type of notice when good cause exists, making the cancellation or modification of scheduled visitation necessary.

11. Missed Visitation. In the event the non-custodial parent misses visitation as the result of illness of the child or parent, an emergency, or other such reasonable excuse, the parties should resolve to make a good faith effort to make up a portion of that visitation within a reasonable period of time, understanding the importance of the non-custodial parent's continuing and frequent contact with the children. The parties should consider an agreement similar to the method of resolving conflicts between regular and holiday visitation as a way to prevent any disagreements from arising.

12. Caretaker Provision. As a method of holding down child care costs and of permitting additional time with the child, each parent should agree to grant to the other the right of first refusal for childcare or baby sitting needs of the other parent for durations of four hours or more. Whenever either parent has a need for child care or baby sitting for a duration of four hours or more, that parent should always make a good faith attempt to first inquire of the other parent, with as much advance notice as reasonably possible, as to whether the other parent desires to provide child care or baby sitting. The other parent would be under no obligation to provide the childcare or baby-sitting, and if the other parent elects to provide such childcare or baby-sitting, it should be done at no cost.

13. Telephone and Mail Privileges. Each parent should agree to allow liberal and reasonable telephone and mail privileges with the children in order to foster as much communication between child and parents as possible.

14. Medical Reports and Bills. Every visitation agreement should contain provisions regarding the sharing of copies of all medical information, and documentation, including bills, preferably within seven (7) days of their receipt, and each parent should agree to immediately notify the other parent in the event of a medical emergency.

15. Abatement of Support During Extended Visitation. The parents should consider including provisions which would provide that if the non-custodial parent's support obligation is current, his or her support obligation would be reduced by 50 percent during any visitation of seven (7) consecutive days or more. The agreement could also provide that if support is not current, the reduction would not apply.

16. Modification. Any visitation agreement should include a provision regarding the permanent revision or modification of the visitation agreement. It is recommended that the parties agree that no permanent modification or revision to the agreement may occur without Court approval. Inclusion of this provision will aid in the future resolution of any conflicts regarding changes to the visitation schedule.

17. Removal of child. Each parent should agree that neither parent may take the child(ren) from the custody of the other parent or any child care provider or other person entrusted by the other parent with the care of the child(ren) without the agreement of the other party during the other party's time of parental responsibility or visitation.

Sample visitation schedule- Included here is a sample visitation schedule which may be used as a guide in constructing your own agreement. Provisions regarding number of visits, hours of each visit, holidays, etc. should be modified as needed. Additional provisions should be included as agreed to between the parties.
