Event Overview: There are a variety of US and international consensus standards and guidelines covering a range of management system topics for environmental protection, worker protection, product safety and product stewardship, product quality, asset protection, emergency management and business recovery/continuity. A group of highly experienced individuals who have served in senior EHS leadership positions at major chemical, materials, electronics, pharmaceutical, aerospace and instrument companies will discuss risk-based decision making and answer the following key questions:

- Why should my organization implement an EHS Management System?
- Why should it be a risk-based EHS Management System?
- What are core EHS Management System processes that will allow satisfying requirements of multiple external standards & guidelines for different business functions/aspects and which ones must be aligned and integrated with business processes?
- How can this be done from a practical standpoint at single sites or for multi-site multinational organizations?
