HOUSE STRUCTURES

1 Storey

One full floor of living area on one level, with a full height stairway to basement usually at the centre of the house or at the side door entrance.

1½ Storey

One full floor of living area with roof slope cutting second floor to about 60% as much living area as first floor.

2 Storey

Two full floors of living area both with full ceiling heights.

2½ Storey

Two full floors of living area with roof slope cutting the third floor to about 60% as much living area as one full floor.

3 Storey

Three full floors of living area, each floor having full ceiling heights.

Tri-Level

(Back Split / Side Split)

The Tri-level house consists of three sunken-type floors of living area plus basement (or fourth level) usually under the one storey section. When counting the basement level this home is also known as a four-level split.

Usually the kitchen, dining room and living room are at the entrance level; the family room, den and laundry room at the lower level of living area and bedrooms at the higher level of living area. All floors are connected by short stairways.

Bi-Level

Two full floors of finished living area. The lower level is usually four feet below grade. The entrance foyer is usually half-way between the lower level and it is connected by short stairways, one going to upper level and one to lower level.

Duplex

Two family housing units. Costs for duplex models are for homes with units one above the other, each unit having separate entrance and services. Outside configuration of a Duplex is basically a detached two storey house.

Triplex

Three family housing units one above the other. Each unit has separate entrance, stairways and services. Outside configuration of a Triplex is basically a detached three storey house.

Semi-Detached

One of two dwellings built side-by-side with one common wall. Semi-detached houses can be of any type and number of storeys (i.e. 1 Storey through Bi-Level)

Row Housing / Townhouse End Row

One of three or more dwellings built side-by-side with one common wall.

Inside Row

One of three or more dwellings built side-by-side with two common walls. Townhouses can also be of any type and number of storeys (i.e. 1 Storey through Bi-Level).
