About the Course:

Are your clients and families struggling with transition from breast or bottle feeding to eating solids? Working with clients stuck on purees, unable to move on to harder chewables? Concerned about choking and how to help your clients progress in a safer manner? This 7-hour class for Occupational Therapist will provide the clinician with current research and recommendations regarding solid food, feeding and learning to chew. The class will focus traditional and alternative method of introducing solids, as well as the reasoning behind choosing one approach over another. By applying principles of sensory and oral motor development, clinicians will develop a strong understanding of safe yet effective solid food introduction in both typical and atypical populations for enhanced therapy outcomes
