Additional Business Letters

It is important to maintain a professional standard when writing additional business letters. Some examples may include the following (see pg. 9 – 13):

- Informational Interview Request
- Interview Thank You Letter
- Response to a Rejection Letter
- Declining an Offer Letter
- Accepting an Offer Letter

Cover Letter Content Overview

Demonstrate a History of Success:

The cover letter is your introduction to a prospective employer that demonstrates why you are a great fit for a position. It should entice the reader to move on to the resume. It includes your contact information, your qualifications and unique value, a thank you statement and a call to action.

This is also the opportunity before meeting with an employer face-to-face to convey your passion for wanting to be a part of an organization or team.

A customized, informative cover letter distinguishes you from other applicants; it is best to include one.

Be brief, 1 page in length:

Avoid rambling and writing cover letters over 1 page in length because it is a turn-off to employers. A concise cover letter that reflects and does not repeat what is on the resume is much more effective.

Cover Letter Layout:

A simple paragraph format is the most commonly used layout. However, you can format in other ways such as a bulleted list to draw interest or place emphasis on specific information.

Information Not Appropriate to Include:

- Negative information about a previous or existing employer
- Salary expectations (unless the employer specifically ask)
- Grammar or spelling errors
- Any content that may appear to seem insincere or desperate in tone (ie. "I just really need a job.")

Cover Letter Checklist

THE HEADER AND ADDRESSING YOUR COVER LETTER

	Try to maintain consistent formatting by using the same header as your resume which includes the most up-to-date contact information.
	Include the current date on the letter.
	Address the letter to the person who is likely to make hiring decisions. Research the organization to determine who that might be.
	When addressing females in the United States use Ms. Instead of Mrs. or Miss since you are unaware if she is married or single.
	Double-check the correct spelling of the contacts name and title before sending out the cover letter. For example "John" could be "Jon."

TARGET YOUR MESSAGE AND HIGHLIGHT ACCOMPLISHMENTS

	Be sure to address why you are writing, how your qualifications fit the position and a direct call to action.
	Relate your skills and experience to the specific position in the organization you desire. Make sure to read the job description thoroughly.
	Customize your letter to fit each job description.
	Incorporate information that reflects your knowledge of the company, its industry and relevant issues.
	Expand on details in your resume, don't repeat it.
	Avoid using a weak tone in your language. For example, "I wish I will have the opportunity to speak with you" or "I hope my experience meets your needs." Instead state "I look forward to speaking with you soon" and "I am confident that my experience meets your needs."

ADDITIONAL TIPS

	Write clearly and concisely. Check your letter for spelling and grammar. Proofread and have someone review your document.
	Use the same font and paper used for your resume.
	If you want to avoid submitting your resume and cover letter online or via e-mail as two separate documents, save them as one with your cover letter on top.

Dear Ms. Smith,

I am a journalism student in my third year at Southern Methodist University. I learned from Dr. White who is one of my professors, that you are an alumna and majored in journalism while you were here at SMU. Dr. White suggested that I contact you as you would be in an excellent position to assist me in a career decision.

As a journalism student I have had several opportunities to gain experience through working for our school's newspaper, writing several articles which were submitted to a local magazine and working at a summer internship with the Chamber of Commerce in my hometown. I will be participating in on-campus interviewing next semester and would like to go into these interviews with a clear sense of direction. I am considering several career options and would appreciate your advice on various career paths.

Would you be available for a brief meeting to talk about career paths in journalism? I shall call you next week to see if we can arrange a time at your convenience. Thank you for considering my request.

Sincerely,
