

A Spiritual Fitness Assessment & 18 Spiritual Exercises for a Healthier Life

Dale Fletcher, M.S.
Faith and Health Connection

The Need: Lifestyle and stress-related conditions such as obesity are at an all-time high. The use of complimentary and alternative medicine is ever-increasing as people search for solutions. Concerned health educators and fitness professionals of the Christian faith need more effective resources/tools to inform their program participants/clients about the connection between faith and health and about corresponding faith-based ‘interventions’ that seem to positively impact on emotional and physical health and well being.

Purpose: To provide a tool that health and fitness professionals of the Christian faith can use as a ‘door opener’ to begin discussions with those they serve about the relationship between faith and health. This initial discussion could facilitate further conversation about the principles of the Christian faith that might impact favorably on their client’s ability to live a full and flourishing life.

Methods: The literature was reviewed to understand faith-related beliefs and practices that appear to be related to health and well being. The Holy Bible was studied to appreciate what scripture reveals about the connection between the Christian faith and well being. Eighteen attitudes, beliefs and practices were identified and classified as Spiritual Exercises, supported by the scripture 1st Timothy 4:7-8.

Results: A 40-item self-report Spiritual Fitness Assessment using a seven point Likert scale that addresses one’s beliefs and attitudes, one’s relationship with God, and one’s practice of their faith was developed. A corresponding booklet titled Spiritual Exercises for a Healthier Life was written

A graduate student at University of Detroit Mercy is undertaking a study to provide information on the reliability (inter-item response consistency), factorial validity, convergent validity (through correlations with my measure of spirituality), and criterion validity (in its ability to predict self-esteem and well-being) of the assessment. Data that looks at the relation of the assessment to social desirability, environmental attitudes, and locus of control will also be generated.

Application: Typically, the assessment would not be offered until there is a degree of trust and respect built between the client and the professional. In discussing the responses to the voluntary assessment with the client, the professional will be able to have a dialog about how to integrate the spirit component of fitness and health programming to impact the client’s health. The professional could share with the client about his/her personal experiences in incorporating these Spiritual Exercises in their own life. The Spiritual Exercises for a Healthier Life booklet could be available for further reading by the client. It includes applicable scriptures for each of the 18 exercises as well as practical information on how to integrate the exercises into their life and the relevance of the exercises to health.

Impact: A deeper faith and corresponding improved health may result in some who explore and incorporate the Spiritual Exercises into their life more completely. Others exposed to these spiritual truths may develop a personal faith that will have rewards in this life and eternally.
