The American Association of Airport Executives, in cooperation with Massport's Boston Logan International Airport, is pleased to present the 2014 AAAE Airport Credentialing and Access Control Conference, August 27-28, 2014, in Boston. This day-and-a-half conference will focus exclusively on credentialing and access control issues in the airport environment.

Airport credentialing and access control are critical activities both from a security standpoint and a business operations perspective. Constantly evolving federal regulations mean reshaping the way we look at performing these important functions, while technology advancements mean identifying solutions to take your airport's credentialing and access control to the next level. In addition to reviewing current aviation employee credentialing and access control programs and requirements, this conference will examine, through expert panel discussions, the issues, challenges and opportunities associated with proposed initiatives related to aviation credentialing and access control. In particular, conference discussions will focus on new and emerging federal programs that will impact credentialing, advancements in identity management and biometrics and strategies for mitigating the insider threat, while simultaneous ensuring successful continuity of operations at your airport.

In addition to the first full day of panel discussions and speakers, the second half-day session with be held on-site at Boston Logan International Airport where airport attendees will learn about best practices and network with industry peers while in a secure, airports-only environment. Conference sessions on August 28 will be restricted to airport attendees only due to logistical constraints and discussion of sensitive security information.

This conference is ideal for representatives from airports, airlines, aviation consultant firms and security technology companies involved in identity management, IT integration, access control systems, smart cards and biometrics. Representatives from the Department of Homeland Security, the Transportation Security Administration, U.S. Customs and Border Protection, and recognized leaders in both the aviation and technology industry have been invited to participate on the program. In addition, an exhibit area showcasing the latest in credentialing, access control, biometric, smart card and identity management technologies will provide an opportunity for attendees to learn more about airport credentialing and access control.

Conference sessions will be held at the Sheraton Boston Hotel August 27. On August 28, breakfast will be held at the Sheraton Boston and transportation will be provided to Boston Logan International Airport for a half-day of conference sessions restricted to airport attendees only.
