Whether traveling abroad as a tourist, student or interim, you will likely be entering an unfamiliar environment. As a participant in a Chicago State University International Program, you have the advantage of a program infrastructure and/or individuals on-site to orient you to local safety issues and to support you in the event of a security or safety emergency. You also have a personal responsibility for your own safety and security.

We recommend the following precautions anytime you travel abroad:

- Register with the nearest U.S. Consulate or your home country embassy (if not a U.S. citizen) so that in-country staff know how to contact you should the need arise;
- Avoid political demonstrations, large crowds and gatherings;
- Maintain a low profile and do not advertise that you are a foreign national;
- Stay in close contact with family members;
- Avoid American hangouts;

Keep local program leaders, home stay family, or living group advisor (if appropriate), your family back home, and instructors informed of your whereabouts if you plan to travel.

Incidences of either verbal or physical attacks toward Americans are relatively rare, yet they do occur. You can protect yourself with some common sense and the simple tactics noted above. Keep in mind that any comments directed at you are rarely personal. Do not take them personally!

No one can guarantee your absolute safety while you're abroad any more than we can guarantee absolute safety on your home campus. Be assured, however, that we have taken precaution and routinely monitor information about the issues and conditions in the locales where you will study or work. We have communication procedures in place so that if an emergency occurs, you will know whom to contact for information, counsel and assistance.

You can find more information about travel advisories, safety and crisis response at <http://travel.state.gov>.

With my signature below, I acknowledge that I have been advised of my personal responsibility for my own safety and that I agree to cooperate with instructions above and those of the program leader, resident director, or in-country sponsor in the event of an emergency.

A program of study abroad is a wonderful opportunity, but it can create emotional, physical stress and anxiety. Living in a different country may be difficult in terms of, for example, the limited availability of certain foods, limited public accessibility for individuals with mobility impairments, and transit and public works systems that are not consistent with western standards. This self-disclosure form has been designed to assist Chicago State University and its overseas counterparts in determining how appropriate accommodations can be made for you overseas. It is, therefore, in your best interest to answer carefully each of the questions below and to provide a candid evaluation of your physical health, stamina, and emotional stability. Information you provide on this form will be held in confidence.

CSU does not discriminate against otherwise qualified participants with disabilities on the basis of disability CSU does not require medical examinations nor will medical information be used to determine participation in CSU programs. However, because medical care in some of our host countries differs from care in the U.S., we strongly recommend that you have a medical examination before leaving, and that you provide to the CSU program staff (in consultation with your physician) any medical information that could be necessary or valuable in the event of a medical emergency while you are abroad. In addition, some countries require a medical examination as part of the student visa application process.

Please note that checking "yes" to any of the following questions will not necessarily prohibit your participation on this program. Checking "yes" may require you to confer with a health practitioner about your suitability for this international program. It will also help Chicago State University, its international counterparts, and your home academic institution to determine the appropriate adjustments for a successful international experience. The information on this form may be shared with on-site program staff to help you manage your health while you are studying abroad. The staff of International Programs and our program associates shall maintain confidentiality in all health matters.

If you have questions regarding your ability to participate in your program because of allergies, dietary restrictions, mobility impairments, etc, we urge you to contact us personally so we can provide you with information which will help you make a decision about your program participation. All inquiries will be held in confidence.
