KODA THE WARRIOR™ "Caverns of Mystery Part 1 of 4"

CREATED BY MARK L. MINDT
 SPIRIT LAKE NATION

As anyone can tell you, KODA and his favorite rez-dog, Benny love going to Pow-wows. On their way back from a Wacipi (wah-Chee-pee), Benny notice a womany crying on the prairie.

She was weeping so loud, she never heard the truck.

She explained to KODA about how she was resting beside the tree, when a cold, dark hand reached out of this hole in the ground and took her most prized possession.

Mitakuye Oyasin! All My Relations!

See? There it is. Can you please help me? I can't be without my...

She was startled to hear KODA's voice.

Like... EEK!

Is there something wrong?

Sure I can help. Just let me get into something more comfortable.

Welcome to Our 40th Anniversary Year

BY DR. PHIL BAIRD, Vice President of Academic, Career and Technical Education

On behalf of the academic family of United Tribes Technical College, I offer a warm welcome to students and staff for the spring semester. This welcome is made more special as the college enters its 40th anniversary year in 2009.

The college has come a long way. People with long-tenured employment at UTTC like Glenna Mueller, Anne Kuyper, Butch Thunderhawk, Ann Kraft and others, can testify about the college's humble beginnings and its growth over the years.

UTTC was born from the collective leadership energies among the five Indian Nations with tribal homelands in North Dakota. With a goal to address a mutual need for economic development, the United Tribes of North Dakota Development Corporation was chartered in January 1968. Human resource development through job skills preparation was the initial focus of early programs.

The United Tribes Employment Training Center (UTETC) opened its doors in the summer of 1969. From there, and throughout the 1970s, the center hosted monthly ceremonies as trainees completed their short-term programs. The focus on vocational education training distinguished UTETC from other Tribal colleges that were getting established at the time.

The center also began the tradition of celebrating American Indian culture with an intertribal event. In late July 1972, the first United Tribes powwow was held. This was an activity that for several years would be held twice annually before becoming the major international signature event that showcases our culture today during a four day gathering each September.

As tribally-controlled higher education evolved in Indian Country, so did UTETC. The center was renamed United Tribes Education Technical Center in 1975, and then became United Tribes Technical College in 1987 as short-term training programs transitioned into accredited one-year certificate and two-year degree programs.

UTTC today stands as one of the premier tribal colleges in the nation, providing access to postsecondary learning opportunities, and so much more, for American Indian people. The college continues to evolve as we look toward establishing upper division coursework and baccalaureate degree programs.

There are many other aspects of the college that are worthy of remembrance and acknowledgement. This year will be an exciting time for students and staff alike as we celebrate our past, present and future.

Again, I offer a hearty welcome and 40th anniversary best wishes to everyone in the United Tribes Technical College campus community.

Student Senate Leadership retreat

BY LISA STUMP, Student Senate President

Happy New Year!

This year has been exciting as well as hectic for the senate. The Student Senate decided to wind down and close out the year with a retreat focusing on Native Leadership. We gathered on a blustery Saturday in December at Bismarck's Radisson Hotel. Thankfully, the hotel staff greeted us with steaming cups of coffee, fresh fruit and bagels.

We opened up with a prayer and a presentation from Dr. Phil Baird. Dr. Baird is an excellent speaker and knowledgeable on not only the history of tribal colleges but the birth of the organizations that promote Native leadership to the present day. Dr Baird inspired us to take the initiative to become leaders and speakers and continue to do activities promoting leadership among students.

After a poolside luncheon, UTTC instructor Tyler Stumpf gave a presentation about communication. Tyler encouraged us to learn about the different communication styles in the professional world and gave us pointers on verbal and non verbal communications. Tyler also complemented us on our strength as Native people to adapt to situations as needed.

We learned about leadership from Dr. Ramona Klein, who led us in discussions and activities to loosen up and become energized. I found the most inspirational comment she made was to get out in the world and teach people about "us" as Natives.

We wrapped it up with Jesi Shanley thanking everyone and encouraging the students to continue in leadership roles. Jesi also generously provided the students with gas cards and Wal-Mart gift cards. Nobody left empty handed. Thanks Jesi!

As we handed out the gift cards the Radisson staff delivered once again a delicious meal and every one really enjoyed themselves.

Thank you all who attended and our awesome speakers and Russell Swagger for allowing us this opportunity. Aho!

New Chapter in Life

EVER THANKFUL: Tribal Environmental Science grad Joshua Logg Jr. strapped on his guitar and sang at the recent Fall Honoring Program as he entered a new chapter in his life as a college graduate. Now he has followed up with a letter from his new digs in Mobridge, SD singing the praises of United Tribes. These people "were in my corner from the beginning while I was a student," he wrote. I will be "forever grateful and thankful for their assistance and friendship": Bud Anderson and the Maintenance Department Staff, Sam Azure, Dr. Phil Baird, Sheri Baker, Daryl Bearstail, Jay Claymore, Wayne Campbell, Scott and Lorraine Davis, Ray Dingman, Emery Dwarf, Dr. Jen Janeck-Hartman and staff, Bev Huber, Jill Keith and staff, LeRoi Laundreaux, Louie Laundreaux, Helen Lindgren, Dennis Neumann, T.J. McLaughlin, Dr. Brian Palecek, Marge Palaniuk, Dennis Renville, Tom Redbird, Margaret Redshirt, Dr. Harriett Skye, Jessica Stewart, Nathan Stratton, Russell Swagger, Butch Thunderhawk, Charlene Weiss and Red Koch and the Transportation Department Staff. "I will close with this," he wrote. "If you are not satisfied with what you have, what more do you need?" Semper Fi! UTN photo

Snack for Good Health

BY PAT AUNE, Extension Coordinator, UTTC Land Grant Program

Nutritious snacks can help you avoid overeating and give you the energy to get through a busy day. A small snack or meal every two to three hours is good for children, every 4-5 hours for adults. Plan in advance so healthy snacks are ready to eat when you are hungry.

What is a healthy snack? Think about the foods your body needs every day. Here are examples of good snacks that contain about 100 calories:

- Half an apple or celery with 2 teaspoons of peanut butter
- 10 almonds or cashews
- Half an English muffin with 1 teaspoon of peanut butter
- 13 plain animal crackers
- Half cup of toasted oat cereal with a half cup of skim milk
- One cup of raw carrots with 3 tablespoons of nonfat dressing
- 10 grapes with 2 tablespoons of cream cheese fruit dip
- String cheese (80 calories)
- One cup juice packed canned peaches
- Two tangerines
- Fruit flavored light yogurt
- One hardboiled egg

Choose whole grain cereals, tortillas, breads and crackers. They provide more fiber and will keep you from getting hungry too soon. Avoid drinking your calories. An orange is a better choice than a glass of orange juice. Healthy food ideas can be found at www.kidshealth.org.

Easy Bean Dip

1 can refried beans (no fat added)
¼ cup salsa

Mix beans and salsa together. Microwave until heated through. Serve with whole wheat crackers and fresh veggies.

Makes 5 servings (1/4 cup per serving). Each serving has 80 calories, 0 gram fat, 14 grams carbohydrate and 4 grams protein.

Simple Snack Mix

1 cup whole-grain cereal
¼ cup dried fruit of your choice (raisins, cranberries, apricots, blueberries, etc)
¼ cup nuts (walnut pieces, slivered almonds, pistachios)
¼ cup whole-grain snack crackers or pretzels

Place all ingredients in a large zip closed bag or a closed storage container.

Shake to mix.

Divide into 3 servings. Each serving has 180 calories, 7 grams fat, 27 grams carbohydrate and 4 grams protein.

A Cradle in the Classroom

Creating a Positive Learning Environment for Student Mothers

Introduction

Before having my own baby, I had little tolerance for family-child excuses. School was the most important thing. I did not make many exceptions for sick kids, spousal issues, daycare problems, etc. When I had my own son, everything changed. I suddenly realized that while work and school were important, my child was by far the most precious thing in my life. I immediately developed a new understanding and empathy for my student mothers. This essay explores the challenges, difficulties, and rewards for women of having children while pursuing a career and educational dream. It shows practical ways I have made my teaching more child-friendly and how it has positively impacted the educational experience of my female students.

Narrative

Sahel stood at my desk, her eyes barely visible under her tightly-wrapped hajib as she stared down at the floor. "Sorry I wasn't here yesterday Teacher," she said. "My little boy was sick and I had to take him to the emergency room last night." Her words burned hot in my head... another stupid excuse for missing class. Sahel had given many other reasons for previous absences: a missed bus, an illness, a problem with her landlord. I was tired of hearing them. I didn't care if the excuses were true or not.

Although I knew that life in the US was difficult for my adult English Language Learners — poverty, difficulty communicating, discrimination, home-sickness, culture shock, and post-traumatic war syndrome—I knew that learning English and earning a high school diploma would give them a chance to succeed. Sahel spoke very little English, and her education had been disrupted by war in Somalia and her subsequent flight as a refugee. She didn't seem to understand the desperation of her situation. She had not turned in one assignment, and it was already week three of the semester.

"Well," I said coldly, my disapproval clearly visible, "You are currently failing this class. You are never here. Excuses aren't going to help you get through school!" Her indignant eyes shot to mine, full of tears, hurt, and anger. "He was in the hospital, Teacher. He is still very sick with pneumonia. I can bring you a doctor's note. School is not the most important thing in the world."

The meaning of her words struck hard. School was my life. During the day, I taught English as a Second Language in an inner-city grade school. Then I drove through rush-hour traffic to teach another four hours at an all-ESL adult high school for new immigrants. I was working hard to pay off my student loans, a new car, and finally buy the things I had always wanted. But I was also teaching because I loved the work. I felt needed, validated-- like I was making a difference in the world. And there stood a young mother with completely different priorities, telling me that I was wrong.

"Well, just try to be here. You can still turn in your assignments for partial credit," I stammered, uncomfortable, trying to quickly remedy the situation. But it didn't help; Sahel never came back to my class. I saw her in the hall a few times throughout the semester. I asked about her son and when she was coming back, but she was evasive. I found out later that she had transferred to another English class.

At a young age, I was aware that boys had more opportunities than girls. Education was not offered freely to the women in my family. My uncles were given cars and tuition. My mother got a sewing machine and was encouraged to get married. At age 28 she went to back to college while working and taking care of a family. She knew that education was the way to independence and self-fulfillment--and she drilled that concept into my head. I wanted to seize every advantage for myself, but I also wanted to empower other women to follow the same path. For me, school had always been the most important thing ...until the day my son, Dakota Sky, came along.

I taught twelve hours the day I went into labor. At 3 a.m., on the way to the hospital, I called my principal's voice mail and listed all of the things that needed to be finished in my absence. I had this baby "thing" all planned out. The baby would just have to fit into my busy schedule. Little did I know that he had a completely different plan. Somewhere between diaper changes and watching his little eyes flutter to sleep at nap time, I realized that nothing else in the world was as important as this precious, helpless, brown-eyed boy. My priorities had to change.

At the end of my maternity leave, I went part-time and quit my night teaching job. I gave up the $20,000 in wages because taking Dakota for walks, to baby yoga, story time, and cuddling were more important than money.

Dakota is two years old now. Until recently I taught English at United Tribes Technical College--a cultural, community, and family-centered Native American Tribal College. The majority of my students were parents. Most are also employed. And I realize that school isn't the most important thing to them either--the welfare of their children and families comes first. So I adapted my teach-

"State of the Tribal-State Relationship"

Address to the 61st ND Legislative Assembly

Myra Pearson, Chair
Spirit Lake Tribe
January 8, 2009

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, Senate Majority Leader, Bob Stenjhem, Senate Minority Leader David O'Connell, House Majority Leader, Al Carlson, House Minority Leader Merle Bouche, Governor John Hoeven, Lt. Governor Jack Dalrymple, members of the North Dakota State Legislature, Tribal Leaders, and distinguished guests. My name is Myra Pearson, Chairwoman of the Spirit Lake Tribe and it is an honor to be invited to speak before the joint legislative session.

On behalf of the five Tribal Nations of North Dakota, I would like to recognize the veterans in the audience today, our brave soldiers serving throughout the world, and those who have made the ultimate sacrifice in service of our nation. These people protect our precious freedoms enabling us to build healthier and stronger communities. The sacrifices of our service men and women and their families will never be forgotten by the Spirit Lake Tribe and all the other Tribal Nations throughout Native America.

I would like to commend Governor Hoeven for the excellent work he has done to promote and maintain a viable and stable economy throughout the state of North Dakota. Opportunities that have been created in the state have been of great benefit to all North Dakotans including those who reside on reservations.

During my lifetime I have witnessed many changes in my own tribal community. I remember a time, not so long ago, when everyday services like running water and electricity were nonexistent in the majority of reservation homes and in fact were considered luxuries. Today as I drive through my community and visit my constituents I see that reservation homes are finally receiving many of these same services that have been enjoyed in state com-

GREAT SPEECH: Spirit Lake Tribal Chairperson Myra Pearson receives a handshake of congratulations from North Dakota Governor John Hoeven after presenting the State of the Tribal-State Relationship speech January 8 during a joint session of the State Legislature. munities for generations. While we continue to face issues relating to standard housing and excessively high utility costs, the fact remains that while change is not always fast, and not always apparent, it is inevitable. As our tribal communities grow, as our economies grow and our families move from one tribe to another and into communities off the reservation, it is increasingly important that Tribal-State relations continue to improve.

As I think of Tribal-State relations in this state the word "change" is extremely important and relevant. It is through our common goals that we will effectuate change in the truest sense. We must continue to work together, sharing our resources whenever possible, to make positive change happen whether that be on issues of education, healthcare, child welfare, criminal justice or our environment. We will continue to serve as an example throughout the nation so long as we commit ourselves to learn from one another and so long as we continue to address our issues with a sense of mutual respect.

The positive relationship that has been forged between the Tribal Nations and the state of North Dakota has in recent times produced legislation resulting in positive changes and a continuing strengthening of our relationship. The Tribal Nations of North Dakota will continue to work with an attitude of mutual respect and understanding with the state of North Dakota to improve our educational systems, law enforcement services, health care, oil and natural gas development, alternative energy development and our overall economies.

We invite state representatives to visit our communities to foster this mutual understanding as we believe that together we will improve the standard of living for all of our citizens.

It is worth noting that during the 2007 Legislative Session, the North Dakota Legislature passed legislation which reflects the on-going positive relationship between the Five Tribal Nations and the elected representatives of the State of North Dakota. Some examples:

- Legislation that provided funding for the North Dakota Indian Affairs Commission, whose staff does an outstanding job communicating with the five Tribal Nations of North Dakota and the state as a whole.
- Amendments to the North Dakota Century Code so that the Sisseton-Wahpeton Oyaté are represented on the North

- Dakota Indian Affairs Commission.
- Tribal College financial assistance, which provides funding for non-Indian students attending a North Dakota Tribal College including United Tribes Technical College.
 - Amendments to the North Dakota Century Code to allow North Dakota tribes to be eligible for emergency drinking water grants so that an adequate quantity of quality water can be provided to people served by rural water systems.
 - Authorization of an oil and gas tax revenue sharing agreement between the state of North Dakota and the Three Affiliated Tribes. This legislation has resulted in an approved agreement and already has had a significant positive impact on all parties.
 - Legislation that put in place permanent state income tax exemptions for enrolled members of any federally recognized Indian Tribe who reside within the boundaries of any reservation in this state and who derive their income within the boundaries of any reservation in this state. This exemption assists the tribes in their ongoing programs of recruiting and retaining Native American health professionals, teachers, executive managers and other employees.

- Reestablishment and extension of a loan guarantee program through the Bank of North Dakota for four more years. The legislation directs the Industrial Commission to establish at the Bank of North Dakota a loan guarantee program for any business located in the state which either contracts with a business owned by one of the Five North Dakota Tribes or which is an American Indian-owned small business located in this state.

The legislation and other initiatives were the result of the hard work of the Tribal/State Relations Interim Committee of the Legislative Council. The Tribal/State Relations Committee endeavors to offer solutions to the many issues that face the State of North Dakota and the Five Tribes of North Dakota. We were pleased to learn that this Committee was extended for an additional two-year term in the 2007 legislature. We look forward to making this important Interim Committee permanent.

In looking to this 61st Legislative Assembly, the Five Tribal Nations will be busy working through their Tribal Councils with the North Dakota Legislature and the North Dakota Executive Branch to continue to find solutions to problems that face our citizens. We will continue to work on issues relating to education, substance abuse, energy development, housing and healthcare. To be more specific we need to work collaboratively on these issues:

- Combating the devastating effects of drug and alcohol abuse in our society. Substances such as “meth” have devastated many tribal and state communities alike. If we are to tackle this issue we need cooperation among our law enforcement agencies, prevention programs, and rehabilitation services. The Five Tribal Nations are well aware that this plague knows no jurisdictional boundaries, and we pledge to work with state officials to defeat this malady.
- The Five Tribal Nations of North Dakota will continue to work with the North Dakota Legislature to seek solutions to the ongoing problem of educational funding throughout the state. The Tribal nations feel strongly that an educated and skilled workforce is the ultimate solution to many of our on-reservation problems. We have a young and growing population who are an asset to our state and our tribes. Over half of our population is under the age of 24. Our Native American youth are a critical part of our state's future. We need relevant and effective education for all our citizens. We also want to thank the Governor for his emphasis on education in his state of the state address to the legislature on Tuesday.

- I also support an initiative proposed by the Chief Justice of the North Dakota Supreme Court to study how people of different races are treated in our North Dakota court system. I believe this is a timely study that can help lead to solutions that will create a more positive environment in our law enforcement and court systems, both within our tribes and for all Native Americans in North Dakota.
- Education is a key factor in economic development. New economic development strategies are in play on the North Dakota Reservations concerning oil and gas development and alternative energy programs, among other things. We are looking forward to working with the North Dakota Legislature on these issues.

- Much improvement is needed concerning rural health care, both on and off the reservation throughout North Dakota and we will be discussing these and other issues in 2009.
- Finally, I want the state of North Dakota to think about our Tribal Nations as the economic recovery plans are being developed in Washington, D.C. We know a great deal of money will be provided to the state for economic recovery. We believe that the state should also be concerned about the economic well-being of the Tribal Nations within its borders.

In closing I want to recognize the tremendous efforts of our elected tribal leadership in North Dakota. Our tribal chairs deal with many jurisdictions, tribal, local, state and federal in carrying out their duties. Chairman Ron His Horse Is Thunder of Standing Rock Sioux Tribe; Chairman Richard Marcellais of Turtle Mountain (also a State senator from District 9), Chairman Marcus Levings of the Three Affiliated Tribes (the Mandan, Hidatsa and Arikara Nation); and Chairman Michael Selvage of the Sisseton Wahpeton Oyaté are all hard working individuals who are working for the betterment of their people. Some of the Tribal Chairs are in the audience. I would like them to stand and be recognized.

I would also like to recognize our Tribal College Presidents, in particular, President David M. Gipp of United Tribes Technical College; and J. Kurt Luger, Executive Director of the North Dakota/Great Plains Indian Gaming Association. These individuals have dedicated themselves to serving Indian Country. All of us will be working diligently with the legislature to always maintain our good relationship and move forward our important issues in this honorable body. Again I thank you for your time and I would like to welcome you to a traditional appreciation ceremony, which will begin immediately after this event in the Great Hall. You have my prayers of thanks and safety, now and in the future.

Newly elected Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Tribal Chairman Richard Marcellais also serves in the ND state senate. He is believed to be the only person in the country currently serving in those two elected offices, simultaneously.

Congratulations

UTTC students research technology use

BY DR. CHERYL LONG FEATHER, United Tribes Research Director

Four UTTC students participated in a unique research project during the fall semester. Deanna Saragosa, Ramona Saragosa (both Red Lake Band of Chipewya Indians), Fabian Betone and Rolynn Clown (both Cheyenne River Sioux) participated in a collaborative project funded by the North Dakota EPSCoR Tribal Colleges Liaison Program with support from the National Science Foundation. The project was conducted with the assistance of faculty advisors Jay Wheeler and Cheryl Long Feather.

The project utilized a unique Native-based Student Research Protocol developed by the North Dakota EPSCoR program. Students utilized the protocol to examine the current access and utilization of technology among American Indian students who attend UTTC. This information can be used to make concrete recommendations to the administration of college as to some appropriate, culturally-relevant ways in which technology can enhance the classroom experience.

"The Time Study Project was a learning experience from the start," said Betone, "It gave me the opportunity to work with other students, plan a project and actually implement it for research purposes."

The project is the second phase of a three-phased project intended to research the impact of technology on the Native American tribal college student. In the first phase, students conducted interviews with community-based elders and a literature review of the topic. From this, students learned the framework regarding the issues of technology use and access in Indian Country. The students met weekly throughout the fall semester to refine and conduct the project.

Said Betone: "Throughout the time invested in this research project, team members were allowed to brainstorm ideas, read recommended literature, write literature reviews, interview Tribal members on their views of technology and develop a technology survey and time-study tool. I think being involved in this project helped me see more clearly how technology can be more developed in rural areas and how it can be more effectively utilized on-campus or for UTTC students."

Deanna Saragosa agreed. "A research project seems so intimidating and overwhelming at first. But then we met once a week to talk about our project and then divided up the work between everyone, it wasn't overwhelming at all. When everyone put in their two or three pieces of research, thoughts, and conclusions, we ended up with a professional research paper."

In this second phase of the project, a time-study tool was developed by the students as part of a technology survey. The time-study form provides a snapshot of the ways students use technology in a detailed format. The students designed a time-study tool and developed a training process for study participants. The students recorded their actions in the tool in a 24-hour, 8-day time-frame. The eight days included school hours, evenings, weekends, and holidays to get a sense of the overall technology use of students. The time study form was accompanied by a one-time, short survey about technology use and access.

Participants were chosen through a stratified random sample process representing UTTC's vocational areas. The time study officially began on Sunday, November 30. The student research group kept in contact with their students throughout the week, reminding them to maintain the fidelity of the time study tool. Upon completion of the time study, the mentors gathered up the time study tools either via electronic (flash drive) or hard copy (folder).

Jay Wheeler, faculty advisor, says he was impressed with the teamwork of the group. "Our goal would not have been

THANK YOU!

What a Great Start!

The United Tribes 40th Anniversary Fundraising Committee wishes that thank the following people for their financial contributions that will help make the 2009 celebration successful.

Pat Aune • Julie Stock-Porter • Bryan Christensen • David Raymo • Glenna Mueller • Kathy Aller • Scott Davis • Brad Hawk

In 2009, United Tribes will mark the college's 40th anniversary with events and projects. A campus committee is organizing these to recognize our progress as an institution of learning, unity, culture, and friendship. To do it well, we need your help with some additional resources. We urge you to join this good effort and help the UTTC 40th Anniversary.

Employees may donate through payroll deduction. If 75% of all UTTC employees contribute $4 to this fund every pay period, we would provide over $20,000 for events and activities in 2009.

It's never too late to help.

Please make a pledge. We can help make all 40th Anniversary events and projects a success.

To make a pledge, contact Brad or Scott at (701) 255-3285 x 1387 or 1291.

Eyes On The Prize

BY CREE BUFFALO, UTTC Early Childhood Education Student

“When you are in doubt, be still and wait; when doubt no longer exists for you, then go forward with courage.”

— Ponca Chief White Eagle

I was forced to grow up fast. I had to care for myself because my mother was a single parent working two jobs for us to survive reservation life. The Cheyenne River Reservation in South Dakota, with a poverty rate of over 82%, is among the poorest counties in the U.S. With my mom at work most of the time, I had the advantage of breaking the rules and getting into mischief—I was pregnant with my son Nayln by the time I was 17. I was terrified and mad at myself. I did not tell my mother I was pregnant until I was five-and-a-half months along. I thought to myself, and was frequently reminded by her, that I had ruined my life. Neither of us knew what to do and for awhile we could only see two heart-breaking solutions: adoption or abortion. I had always planned to better myself by moving off the reservation and going to college and playing basketball and opening up my own business. Then the dreams were gone when I discovered I was pregnant with my baby boy. My mother and I never thought I'd end up pregnant as a high school student.

I never wanted to be labeled as a “young, single, mother who didn't graduate high school,” — or as some elders on Cheyenne River put it, “Kids having Kids.” There are a lot of teenaged moms there, as young as 14 years old. These girls drop out and do nothing because there isn't enough employment. They live with their parents and struggle to support their own child. Many take up lives as if they don't have kids; they don't own up to the responsibility of tending to their own child.

Pregnancy is supposed to be a joyous stage in a woman's life, but I felt degraded and stupid. I knew I was unprepared for taking care of someone, let alone a newborn baby boy. I knew so little of what to expect and what to provide. I had very little knowledge to pass on to this precious child.

On December 28, 2006 at eight-thirty-five p.m., I gave birth to my handsome, precious baby boy Nayln Daeyson Quade Joaquin. I immediately realized he was the light of my life. I regretted my earlier ruthless thoughts. Holding this precious, yet helpless, human being in my arms took my breath away. As I looked into those big round eyes, I knew he was sent from above to guide me in the right direction. My mom instantly had a change of heart about this innocent child as well. She realized he was an angel sent from Heaven.

Throughout my pregnancy, my baby's father was not around—not even at the birth. He met Nayln two weeks later. Being a father did not change his ways; he was immature and went about his life as if he had no child. For the first four months of my son's life, his father was not around even though we lived together. My friend Brittany helped me more than Nayln's father! Susie, Nayln's paternal grandmother tried to make him start acting like a father, but I already knew how life was going to be based on those first four months. We were going to be alone. When the father wanted to be there, I let him because I had grown up without a dad, and it bothered me. I occasionally resented my mother for leaving my father. I guess I didn't want my son to feel the same way toward me for not giving his father a chance. After I did give my all, and so many chances, I realized that I was being something I wasn't, and I was disgusted with myself because I wasn't happy. I was living in a mirage.

I noticed my mom's bonding moments with my son. I realized how she had the means to give him everything. It made me think, “I want to be able to give my son things as well.” So I decided to go to college. With the support of my loving mother, I decided to come here—United Tribes Technical College—to start a real and successful life for me and my child. Having Nayln here at college motivates me to be the best student and parent. I wanted to learn all I could about raising my son, so I took up Early Childhood Education. Now I can learn as he grows. My baby's father helped me my first year of college and then, in January 2008, his mother passed away from cancer. He inherited a lot of money and decided he did not need Nayln or me in his life. When school resumed in August 2008, I returned as a single parent and full-time student. Both Nayln and I have had to struggle to get used to the many challenges we have encountered since coming back to campus. But I try to use the situation between my baby's daddy and me as motivation to finish what I started.

As I write this, there are two weeks remaining in the fall semester. My previous 4.0 is now a 3.8, but I'm not giving up. Even though the semester was a challenge because of my personal life, I am not willing to let it destroy my educational and life goals. My mission is not to wallow in my own pity, but to do everything in my power to succeed in building a foundation for my son and to be a role model for him. I want to give him everything! I know how it feels to want and I will do my very best to meet his needs. I want my son to realize that nothing in life is impossible if you keep your eyes on the prize. When I feel like quitting, I look at my prize—Nayln—and I know for certain that I will accomplish my dream.

Cree Buffalo's essay has been selected to be published in Women's Perspectives- ABE Student Writing Journal, Issue 4, 2009; WE LEARN Network, www.litwomen.org.

Staying in School

Everything passes – even the worst times

BY EMMALINE TALLMAN FILLSPIPE,
UTTC Teacher Education Graduate

I attended United Tribes Technical College from August 2004 to May 2008. I was blessed to find a program called Prairie Alliance for Special Education in the college's Teacher Education Department.

It was difficult for me to get used to Bismarck and its surroundings when I came to UTTC with my daughter, Ilyanna, who was still in day care, and my husband. But I knew I had to adjust because this was going to be my home for the next four years. I also knew that I had to cope with my feelings for the reservation and my relatives and create a new outlook for my life in school.

It turned out that I came to love Bismarck. Eventually I became grateful for everything I experienced and everyone I met. But that doesn't mean it was easy.

My resolve was tested during my first semester. My aunt, who was like a mother to me, became ill and was in the hospital for a month before she passed away. Despite the pain and loneliness, I did not move back home; I stayed.

But it was a struggle to stay at school. I didn't miss the reservation as much as I missed the people, the individuals themselves. I mostly missed my grandma. Each time I went home I saw her getting older. I appreciated her more after being away and she became another reason for me to finish school.

As time went on, school felt like it was never going to end. Each semester became a struggle. I always had to find a reason to finish.

Then, my grandma's little sister became sick. We called her Grandma Tiny.

Emmaline's grandmother Ramona Tallman, Allen, SD, saw Emmaline graduate from UTTC in May 2008.

When I returned home one weekend to see how she was, I learned she had passed away. Her funeral was going to be during the week. I told my mom with regret that I had to do my field experience training. She explained to me that Grandma Tiny would understand that getting this education was very important. Still I kept calling my mom and asking how everything was, I felt like I should have been there. Grandma Tiny was buried with my high school satin star quilt.

My son was born in December 2005. My due date was December 18 but because it was between semesters I scheduled my C-section for December 8. That way I would have four weeks to heal and go back to school.

Through my daily routine and life back home, I would sometimes just drop my shoulders. I felt it was too hard to stay at school. Often I would confide in two of my instructors, Lisa Azure and Leah Hamann, who helped make school life bearable.

I remember the times when money was tight and my smile was forced. I would always look to my children to make sure they were okay. I would see their smiling faces. They were fed, clothed, and they were happy, and that made me feel we would be okay.

Then, on December 9, 2007, we had an apartment fire. It started early in the morning when my husband was away on a hunting trip. My son and daughter and I escaped with only a few clothes and waited with neighbors for the fire department. I could see my children watching me when I began to cry, so I tried to suck up the tears and watch as my apartment burned.

After the fire was out we were allowed back in to see what was left. I didn't think it would be so bad until I saw all my teacher clothes covered with soot. I had bought these over the three years I was in school. They were to be used for my student teaching and now everything was destroyed.

As the days went on, I became grateful for what I had left, especially my family. To be safe and together was all we needed.

RUSSELL "Bud" MASON SR.

Buffalo Bull Boy

NEW TOWN – Russell "Bud" Mason, Sr., 72, New Town, passed away January 14 after a long fight with cancer. Services were held January 19 at St. Anthony Catholic Church, New Town.

Bud was a military veteran, tribal leader and civil servant who made national contributions in his work with the Indian Health Service. He was a past national director for IHS alcohol/chemical health abuse and education. He helped create national initiatives at IHS to address substance abuse that, no doubt, saved countless lives throughout Indian Country.

Bud was the elected chair of the Three Affiliated Tribes of Fort Berthold serving from 1994 to 1998. He believed strongly in good government and creating the best for tribal people. He served as a member and chairman of the United Tribes Board.

"Bud did many great things for Indian people," said David M. Gipp, United Tribes Technical College president. "I knew him as an honest, direct and proactive thinking man. He was a gentleman and role model to many."

He was an advocate for health and wellness programs and was always active himself, only recently giving up skiing, running and canoeing. He ran in Boston, Phoenix and New York Marathons, climbed mountains and once bicycled across America for a charitable cause.

Russell "Bud" Mason Sr.

"He believed and lived by a code of honesty, good ethics and a high standard in his life's work," wrote Gipp and current United Tribes Chairperson Myra Pearson in a tribute to Mason. "He called for the same in government—whether at the tribal, state, or federal level."

He knew and honored his culture and tribal traditions. He was dearly loved and respected by his family and his children and grandchildren and those who followed his path in life.

Bud is survived by his sons Rusty, New Town, and Matt, Albuquerque, NM; daughters Kim Baker, New Town, Vickie Fox, Bismarck, and Roselle Nichols, Red Oak, TX; his brother Matt, New Town; adopted brother Richard Zephier, Phoenix, AZ; adopted sister Yvette Joseph, Albuquerque, NM; 17 grandchildren; and 11 great grandchildren.

ed. With only a month before the beginning of student teaching, we moved to a new apartment and worked to make it into a home for us. Despite the setback, life moved along fine.

During my student teaching I came upon some new barriers. I student taught in 6th grade for eight weeks and 2nd grade for another eight weeks in the Bismarck Public Schools. During that time I was challenged to understand the many different views of parents, teachers and students. I encountered some prejudice and racism, but I never took it upon myself to absorb those feelings. Instead I stood tall and said to myself, "I'm from the rez and I AM a real fighting Sioux." I knew

I had strong values: courage, generosity, wisdom and fortitude. No one could take those away from me. The experience made me a better person than I thought I could be.

When May arrived it was time for graduation. Because of the price of gas at the time, my family caravanned in two cars from Allen, SD, six hours away. I was ecstatic that they came to see me graduate with a Bachelors Degree. I was the first one in my immediate family to earn a Bachelors Degree.

It was a proud moment for me. I was grateful that my grandma was there to see me. On the way up to get my diploma, my mom gave me a hug and said she was going to walk me up to the stage. That did it. Tears fell from my eyes like rain. "I did this," I told myself as I walked across the stage. Fourteen years after I vowed to graduate from college, my goal was achieved!

After graduation I finished the second part of my student teaching in Special Education at Loneman School, Oglala, SD. Now I'm waiting for my teacher's certificate. I work in a self contained classroom and I enjoy every minute of teaching.

Recently, when I saw my friends who are still at United Tribes, I said to them: "I'm here to tell you that school really does end."

I told them I know what they're going through. And I can tell you this: everything passes, even the worst times you have in school. If you stick it out, you continue down the road and you are grateful.

I believe that absolutely nothing happens in this world by mistake. Everything will make you a better person. And when you achieve your goal, like I did, you look back and know how important it was that you stayed in school.

My school days are not over. I plan on getting a Masters degree and after that a Ph.D.

Why a Ph.D.? Well because while growing up I would always say, "If my grandpa was alive, I'd be a doctor." In his honor, I will.

Emmaline Tallman Fillspipe completed her BS degree in Special Education and Elementary Education from Sinte Gleska University in December 2008. She participated in the Prairie Alliance for Special Education Program (Department of Education/OSEP), a partnership between UTTC and SGU to increase the number of highly qualified special education teachers. She is now a teacher at Loneman School, Oglala, SD. Emmaline wrote of her college experience to share encouragement with others who may encounter difficulty on their higher education journey.

CEU OPPORTUNITIES

UTTC is proud to launch several learning opportunities for students and employees during the Spring 2009 semester. Students and employees who have not completed an AAS degree may enroll in the courses for college credit. Employees who have completed any college degree may enroll in the courses for CEU's.

FREE LEARNING

You read it right! These learning opportunities are FREE to anyone who enrolls & completes the course.

Advising for Success Courses

*Open to Employees

This course is for anyone who advises or teaches students and uses computerized programs within those roles. Another goal of the course is to further develop a stronger team relationship between UTTC faculty, student support services staff, administrative, and other advisors.

Choose 1 session to attend. Course results in 2 CEU's or 1 credit.

- Session A) March 9th & 12th (Spring Break), 9-12 a.m.
- Session B) March 24th & 26th, 4:00 to 7:00 p.m.
- Session C) March 31 – April 2nd, 4:00 to 7:00 p.m.

InfoMaker Courses

*Open to Employees

This course will help you get started in using InfoMaker with the EX database. You will be introduced to Profiles, Libraries, Report Objects, and Queries and learn how to manipulate the look of your reports. This course is designed for employees who work with Jenzabar EX and need to be able to run, manage, change, or develop reports using EX data.

Dates: TBA

Technology Applications Courses

*Open to all Students & Employees

These courses focus on practical application of various Microsoft Office 2007 programs. Each session focuses on a specific program so that you will have time to use the newly learned information. Additional tasks will be assigned to accomplish independently. Each session equals 2.0 CEU's or 1.0 college credit.

ing philosophy to make education work for them by making my classroom a child-friendly environment. My office phone rang while I sat reading student essays last October, and a quiet, worried voice asked, "Hi Tanya, this is Cree. My baby Nayln is sick today, and his daycare wants me to pick him up. What should I do?" Instinctively, I said, "If he's not too sick, you can just bring him to class with you." And she did. I taught a short lesson; then I held Nayln and gave him a bottle while

Cree finished her final project with her collaborative group. Cree didn't miss her class, and the other students enjoyed seeing the tiny visitor.

Since then, other students occasionally brought their kids to class in an emergency. A few times, parents have had to take their children out of class for a short break. But most of the time, the kids were hardly noticeable. I kept a basket of crayons, toys, fruit snacks, and Play-doh by my office door to encourage parents to come to me for help—even if they don't have a babysitter. My students knew they could call ahead and get assignments, attend other sections of the same class or submit assignments by e-mail in a crisis. One student, Jackie, had her baby mid-semester and still got a B+ on the final test because of the afternoons I spent tutoring her. She came by every few months to visit and show off her beautiful baby girl.

I know I can't go back and change what happened with Sahel. But I can make sure that the women I teach now feel empowered to achieve their educational goals without neglecting their families. The result is increased attendance and retention rates as well as better rapport with students. There are definitely times when my office looked more like a daycare than a college, but I was happy to pick up the toys, knowing that their mothers came back to learn again tomorrow.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Tanya Spilovoy is a teacher, writer and mother. She graduated from Hamline University with a MAEd in Education with an Emphasis in English as a Second Language. She taught at grade schools, high schools, and universities in Beijing, PR China, Minnesota, and until recently, was an English Instructor at United Tribes. This essay has been selected to be published in the forthcoming book: Empowering Women through Literacy: Views from Experience, which is part of the series, Adult Education Special Topics: Theory, Research & Practice in Lifelong Learning, Mev Miller, Ed.D. and Kathleen P. King, Ed.D. (eds.).

reachable without everyone committing to it and working so well as a team. Even when the dreaded time obstacle kept rearing its ugly head, [the group] stayed positive and solved each issue as it arose together."

Ramona Saragosa said the project helped open her eyes to the entire campus. "I really enjoyed working on this project; I had a blast. It's fun to interact with different people on campus that you never see from different vocations and see who has access to what and when. No one really thinks about the students who do not have 24-hour internet access, and when they need it most, it's not available to them. I never realized how much of an issue this can be for the students who do not have it until I got involved with this project."

The data for the time study will be analyzed as part of Phase III of the overall project. However, the students did conduct some preliminary analysis of the survey and time study tool and noted the following:

- 73% surveyed own a computer (a higher-than-expected rate)
- One-third of the students who own a computer do not have internet access; 60% of the representative sample of students do not have regular access to the internet
- Those who do not have regular access gain access during business hours through the UTTC computer labs (44%), UTTC classrooms (39%), and other (17%).
- Those who do not have regular access gain access after business hours (evenings and weekends) through friends and family (39%), the UTTC computer lab (17%), the public library (11%), and other, while the remaining students (28%) do not have access at all to the internet on evenings and weekends.

After looking at the results, the group realized there might have been some bias in looking at only internet usage and the type of web browsing students may be doing. Preliminary findings show that despite income or familial status, almost everyone had and used cell phones regularly. This will be cause for more exploration in the next phase of the project.

Student participant Rolynn Clown says she sees the benefits of the project going beyond recommendations, however. "I felt the team put in a great effort to obtain information from not only the students but from others like teachers, staff, and community members. Everyone was so excited and very supportive about what the study is about. I've come to appreciate how everyone needs to participate [in studies like this one] like parents, teachers, staff, and other schools to form a network and share ideas on how to implement technology in the classrooms where everyone would learn from each other."

Fellow student researcher Deanna Saragosa agreed that the learning experience goes beyond the data obtained. "From this I've learned to have more self-confidence and not be afraid to try something that may seem impossible or too challenging for me. I learned a lot about myself, technology, my culture, and especially teamwork!"

The study will conclude this semester with the final phase of the project. Any new students wanting to get involved with the project can contact Cheryl Long Feather, Research Director, x 1491 for more information.

United Tribes group attends Inaugural Parade

A hardy group from United Tribes braved hours and hours of cold weather in the nation's capital January 20 to march in the Inaugural Parade for President Barack Obama. These are some images that were available at press time.

Like people around the nation, United Tribes staff and students gathered near TVs to view the parade and Presidential Oath Ceremony.

ALUMNI SEARCH: Looking good in the 1970s, a student group on the steps of the education building at United Tribes Technical College. As UTTC enters its 40th anniversary year, we want to hear from the people who matter most. College President David Gipp estimates that perhaps 13,000 or more students attended since classes began in 1969. Quite the extended family! And we want to hear from you. Please e-mail 40th Anniversary Chairman Scott Davis (sdavis@uttc.edu) and tell him how you are doing. And, if you are in this photo, let him know which one of these proud indigenous learners you are.
