18. Description
Original 1-1/2 story late-18th-century "Cape" farmhouse (largely reconstructed 1938) forms south side of roughly U-shaped complex surrounding a courtyard. These Colonial Revival farm buildings have various rooflines, clapboard or shingle surfaces, 2 large bow windows and otherwise mostly 9/6 windows. Original complex bounded by stonewalls to the south and east; later farm and school buildings built c.1940 and in the late 1960's are to the north and west and across the road. (Date of 1819 is on granite gatepost.)

19. History
See continuation sheet.

20. Significance
Large Colonial Revival farmhouse, now main building of church-related preparatory school, part of which is late 18th-century farmhouse associated with Gowing family, notable farmers and public servants of 19th-century Dublin, and once owned by Samuel Whitney Hale, Governor of New Hampshire. Boston architects Belknap & Weir reconstructed much of the 1798 Gowing Farm, but they did so as an extension of the original structure's style.

19. History

Original house built by James Gowing, Jr. (1763-1836) soon after he settled in Dublin in 1788. (His younger brothers William and Joseph farmed the adjoining Allis farm.) House probably enlarged by Gowing in 1819. He left the property to his son Almerin (1799-1882), militia captain, commander of grenadiers, and selectman (1837-39). Sold in 1853 to Samuel Whitney Hale & Nathan Whitney who used timberland for woodenware manufacture. Hale later became Governor of N.H. (1882-83). After passing through numerous owners it was acquired in 1895 by Boston manufacturer Louis Cabot as part of his extensive gentleman's farm-estate. In the 1920's it became a pig farm operated by Indians from Maine named Poland, who allowed the house to deteriorate.

In 1937 Mrs. Selina L. Riker, a wealthy widow (Riker Drugstores), bought the farm and commissioned Boston architectural firm Belknap & Weir to design (1938) and substantially reconstruct the old Gowing house. Builders were Dublin contractor Ned Pierce and foreman Leonard "Nick" Williams. Also built during this period were a caretaker's cottage, a guest house, a farmhouse and a barn. The reported cost was $360,000.

The Wenigmann family, who purchased the estate after Mrs. Riker's death in 1942, added a large hen house, and in 1954 the new owner, F. Nelson Blount, president of Ocean Spray Cranberry, added a dairy barn. Blount donated the whole farm to the Dublin Christian Academy, a private secondary school, in 1964, before his death in an airplane accident Sept. 2, 1967.
